We're finalizing an audiobook that we would like to distribute through Apply Music and/or Apple Books. Can anyone recommend a contact at Apple that we can work with to develop an amended Terms of Service?

Thank you!

Best,

We are researching potential CMS platforms to implement in our (Army-based) organization of roughly 900 personnel. Any recommendations for specific CMS platforms to explore? We are unsure if we will be able to implement a platform that requires cloud computing, so CMS solutions inside and outside of the Cloud will both be considered.

Yes, that is what DoD OIG did just as I was departing as chief, public affairs there back in September 2016.

We had had a custom system built in house and when the folks who built it left, the DMA option was found to be ideal within DoD.

I second AFPIMS for public-facing content. NDU migrated there in 2014 or so. It's low cost, and ticks a lot of compliance boxes right from the start.

For internal content, we are in the process of merging an on-prem 2016 SharePoint instance (for Ops content), and an O365 Government account (for Academic content) into one giant O365 A5 (academic) cloud.

We are looking for both intra- and internet CMS solutions. We are currently using Sharepoint 2013, and would like to upgrade to a new system—potentially even Cloud-based, but we aren't sure if that will be possible in the immediate future.

The content merging for your internal content between Sharepoint and O365 Gov't to one giant A5 account is interesting, and potentially very relevant to our research of potential options to explore. Thank you!

Does your agency/organization maintain an inventory of its official digital presence--websites, apps, AI, audio or video libraries, including social media and collaboration accounts on third party sites)?

If so, how? Do they use a commercial product to do this? Or has your agency developed something to do this? And how's that working out--what are the pros and cons of the method that's being used?

Whose responsibility is it to maintain this inventory? CIO? Communication/Outreach?

And lastly, how important do you think it is for there to be an authoritative inventory of your agency's official digital presence? Does/would an inventory help your organization manage and allocate resources? Should an agency's digital presence inventory be available to the public so that the public can validate authenticity and authoritative status?

We are migrating to the USWDS per the USDA mandate. I have downloaded the USWDS Sketch file and mocked up our header and footer, but was looking to see if anyone had any tips or tricks for doing full page mockups in Sketch using the USWDS components? Thanks in advance,

The State of Iowa publishes a Directory of all agency websites and social media accounts. We hope it is largely accurate and complete although an agency could create a new social media account or program based website and forget to list it in the directory. We use Monsido to monitor the site and if we find any broken links we work with the agency to get their profile updated.

Our directory was developed by our staff using .Net and is available for reuse by other government entities. The directory also connects to our Active Directory (LDAP) to allow Iowans to search for the phone number and email information for all state employees.

Hi Content Managers,

For the past year, the USAGov Contact Center has been doing a monthly deep-dive study of its calls and chats with the public. The latest post on the USAGov Blog gives an inside look at the top questions in English and Spanish that people have been asking about government benefits and services. All,

Has anyone implemented a Terms of Use that their website content managers are required to read & sign as part of their acceptance into gaining access to a CMS for managing their public website content? If you have, could you contact me directly with a copy of your Terms of Use that those folks are required to sign?

Thanks

Hello!

The NSF Office of Polar Programs has a fresh, new vacancy for a GS-12-13 Communications Specialist! I am very excited about this position as the person filling it will be my teammate. Ideally, the person will have mad science writing and social media skills and will be supporting some very cool science (heh) in a variety of exciting ways. There's always a lot going on in OPP, and you get to work with some really great people on some amazing projects.

And yes, this person will get to visit Antarctica and the Arctic! ☺

Please share this vacancy widely with your networks. Thanks!

 The State of Iowa publishes a Directory of all agency websites and social media accounts. We hope it is largely accurate and complete although an agency could create a new social media account or program based website and forget to list it in the directory. We use Monsido to monitor the site and if we find any broken links we work with the agency to get their profile updated.

Our directory was developed by our staff using .Net and is available for reuse by other government entities. The directory also connects to our Active Directory (LDAP) to allow Iowans to search for the phone number and email information for all state employees.

Does your agency/organization maintain an inventory of its official digital presence--websites, apps, AI, audio or video libraries, including social media and collaboration accounts on third party sites)?

If so, how? Do they use a commercial product to do this? Or has your agency developed something to do this? And how's that working out--what are the pros and cons of the method that's being used?

Whose responsibility is it to maintain this inventory? CIO? Communication/Outreach?

And lastly, how important do you think it is for there to be an authoritative inventory of your agency's official digital presence? Does/would an inventory help your organization manage and allocate resources? Should an agency's digital presence inventory be available to the public so that the public can validate authenticity and authoritative status?

I could use the community's advice on listserv/newsletter options and website designers/providers. Small agency. Small budget.

We have an outdated, cheap listserv that we'd like to update to an accessible email/newsletter subscription platform for content at a reasonable price.

Our Drupal 7 site needs a refresh and I'm looking at upgrade paths (8/9) or another CMS. GPO last designed/hosted our site years ago and now we're hosting with our IT provider that has not supported our site appropriately. At minimum we're looking at a redesign.

As content managers, what options work for you? Any input appreciated, as we're looking at options/decisions in the next few weeks.

Thanks,
Nick

Hi Nick,

I'm no expert at such things, but I think an interagency agreement, perhaps with an agency that has a mission peripheral to NCD, would be your best bet.

Otherwise as far as newsletter SaaS goes, staying within the FedRAMP Marketplace will limit you to services you can't afford/justify.

Looking at you, Granicus.

But if you could hop onto an agency running a Drupal multisite instance and maybe even get a topic on their GovDelivery account, you could run with the big dogs and not deplete all $3M of NCD's budget.

Seems simple when I type it, but I'm doubtless missing a thousand complications. Best of luck to you.

Hi,

We use Siteimprove for several of our public websites and it's a very handy tool. In addition to what you mentioned, we've found the policy feature in particular helps with:

- content (e.g., updated #s, references to individual, program names) and functionality (e.g., link structure, embeds) changes
- quality assurance (e.g., AP style adherence, phone formats, stale content)
- inclusion/accessibility (e.g., preferred terms, reading level, alt tag)
- performance (e.g., image size, https only)

Thanks,

At the risk of being perceived as a product endorsement, I will say that SiteImprove rocks.

We've reviewed a number of tools, and this one is the most comprehensive and also user friendly. It shows you the issues, and exactly where they are located--and importantly HOW to address. Also comes with a priority map to help you prioritize items with the greatest impact. Not cheap, but worth the investment.

We have had both Siteimprove and Monsido - Monsido does a good job on both broken links and accessibility and it is quite a bit less expensive than Siteimprove. We also find Monsido to be more user friendly than Siteimprove.

Hi Cathy,

I'm going to throw my increasing weight (COVID-tide humor?) behind a product that you might not be able to use, Scrutiny from PeacockMedia. When I picked it up, it was everything I thought I'd need to spend thousands on a subscription for, purchased outright for just £99. Now, it's something like $115. Hmm. There's math for that...

It crawls sites from your desktop (inside your firewall, one assumes), finding broken links, misspellings, and arbitrary content of your choice. The lead dev answers her own email (and seems really nice – but it might help that I love her work – who knows?) and seems genuinely interested in producing a good product.

Also, it runs on a Mac. Only. On. A. Mac.

L8r!

Larry

We use SortSite. Another one from Europe. It's a little clunky but gets us everything we need and is a desktop app, no subscription needed, and inexpensive.

We just switched from SiteImprove to Monsido because Monsido cost us a little less than HALF what we were paying for SiteImprove, AND because SiteImprove was too much for our content maintainers to take in, understand, and act on.

Don't get me wrong, SiteImprove is an amazing tool and well worth the money if you have a dedicated team of web content and UX professionals who understand and can use all the detailed information it offers.

We don't.

Like a lot of academic and research web sites, we spread content duties far and wide. Most of my creators and maintainers are scientists, post-docs and students, admins, etc. SiteImprove was too detailed and confusing for them to use effectively. So, we just were not using what we paid for.

I miss SiteImprove's extras (like the social media share widget) and high-touch customer service, but it wasn't worth more than double what we were paying.

I also like a feature of Monsido that lets you make immediate, temporary changes to your website globally. I've found this really useful for immediate fixes to things like:

- Hardcoded URLs in headers or footers (that may take a little more time to fix) track down
- A single bad link embedded in multiple pages (while I track down and kill them all)
- The Brits & Aussies on staff who refuse to use American spellings of the Queen's English (I just overrule them globally)

Hope that's useful!

Hi all,

First things first: Why the dedicated Accessibility tools don't check dead links is crazy to my thinking.

From an accessibility standpoint, I've looked at most of these tools and found them lacking. Why? Because fundamentally these tools are the single adjustable wrench in every homeowners' drawer. Great for amateurs, frustrating and poorly suited for professionals. The "all in ones" are pretty limited accessibility tools because at their core they are code checkers, and thus only check lines of HTML code for technical issues (missing ALT tags, etc.), NOT Javascript, custom injects (e.g. Tableau, PowerBI, etc), or multiple versions of pages (such as adaptive views for screensize). To correct for this, some of the tools mentioned then flag possible errors for checking (these tools create huge lists of "violations" that are false positives).

If you want to check for accessibility, I'd strongly recommended working with a dedicated accessibility toolset, with a manual process to supplement it (since no tool finds everything). Accessibility is technical and human factors, and so the best tools are ones that incorporate an understanding of how assistive tech works with a whole page for real people, not just if a particular line of code validates.

That said, I know some local governments might not have resources for professional accessibility tools. within that context, I am more on the side of using "lighter" consolidated tools to find dead links and obvious accessibility code violations. The more robust ones generate far too much info for a small team to manage, and only a small team should use this approach.

I will second all things listed here by (b) (6). We are in a similar situation with our content creators ability to use Siteimprove to its full potential. We used it for several years but recently moved to Monsido for about half the cost. Very satisfied with the new platform.

We just switched from SiteImprove to Monsido because Monsido cost us a little less than HALF what we were paying for SiteImprove, AND because SiteImprove was too much for our content maintainers to take in, understand, and act on.

Don't get me wrong, SiteImprove is an amazing tool and well worth the money if you have a dedicated team of web content and UX professionals who understand and can use all the detailed information it offers.

We don't.

Like a lot of academic and research web sites, we spread content duties far and wide. Most of my creators and maintainers are scientists, post-docs and students, admins, etc. SiteImprove was too detailed and confusing for them to use effectively. So, we just were not using what we paid for.

I miss SiteImprove's extras (like the social media share widget) and high-touch customer service, but it wasn't worth more than double what we were paying.

I also like a feature of Monsido that lets you make immediate, temporary changes to your website globally. I've found this really useful for immediate fixes to things like:

- Hardcoded URLs in headers or footers (that may take a little more time to fix) track down
- A single bad link embedded in multiple pages (while I track down and kill them all)
- The Brits & Aussies on staff who refuse to use American spellings of the Queen's English (I just overrule them globally)

Hope that's useful!

M

Are we talking about content management? Like reshelving books in a bookstore, or refolding pants found in the shirt section of a clothing retailer?

I wonder how many supervisors regularly review the digital content in their domain.

This is a problem I am forcing myself to deal with at home. Where I am both supervisor and worker. I'm thinking more is not always better. And maybe cheap is not enough. Maybe the problem is not the cost or availability of the software, but my expectations, or my job descriptions. In my case, all these parameters align. Maybe it's just a small town thing. I live on an island.

We use Siteimprove at work. To me, the Siteimprove findings are valid. I don't always make any change, but I do "listen".

Take care. Stay healthy.

Hi,

We are gearing up to conduct user testing on our public website and would appreciate any recommendations for software (e.g., Optimizely, Lookback). Our testing will consist of small group interactive sessions (remote for now). We would like to be able to record user interactions with our website including video, audio commentary, navigation trails, heat maps, etc. Thanks in advance for any software and/or resource suggestions!

Thanks,

Yes. I see that the Deque axe people say that their axe browser plugin can find ~50 percent of accessibility problems. HHS and other agencies have accessibility checklists for each of the top file types.

Hi all,

First things first: Why the dedicated Accessibility tools don't check dead links is crazy to my thinking.

From an accessibility standpoint, I've looked at most of these tools and found them lacking. Why? Because fundamentally these tools are the single adjustable wrench in every homeowners' drawer. Great for amateurs, frustrating and poorly suited for professionals. The "all in ones" are pretty limited accessibility tools because at their core they are code checkers, and thus only check lines of HTML code for technical issues (missing ALT tags, etc.), NOT Javascript, custom injects (e.g. Tableau, PowerBI, etc), or multiple versions of pages (such as adaptive views for screensize). To correct for this, some of the tools mentioned then flag possible errors for checking (these tools create huge lists of "violations" that are false positives).

If you want to check for accessibility, I'd strongly recommended working with a dedicated accessibility toolset, with a manual process to supplement it (since no tool finds everything). Accessibility is technical and human factors, and so the best tools are ones that incorporate an understanding of how assistive tech works with a whole page for real people, not just if a particular line of code validates.

That said, I know some local governments might not have resources for professional accessibility tools. within that context, I am more on the side of using "lighter" consolidated tools to find dead links and obvious accessibility code violations. The more robust ones generate far too much info for a small team to manage, and only a small team should use this approach.

We're attempting to manage PDFs on our existing Drupal 8 site, looking for best practices from the community. Our site is fairly small, we're hosting about 1k documents. We're having difficulties keeping up with linking, version control, and auditing. Ending up with orphaned and multiple versions ('-0') documents is an ongoing struggle. If we grow the site, the lack of effective controls will most certainly multiply our issues. If you can help with any (or all) of the following, I'd greatly appreciate:

1. Would you be willing to share any policies/guidance on how you manage documents?
2. Can you recommend Drupal modules that have helped you successfully extend the media capabilities?
3. Are there external tools you use to manage your site assets?

Thanks in advance!

Hi Wayne,

Are you using the Media module? At DrupalCon I attended a session on this and it seems like the way to go for images, documents, and other types of media. Rather than a document being linked to on multiple pages, you add that document as a Media item (which is basically an entity reference) and then add that one Media item to those pages. There is also a contrib module called Entity Usage that can help you keep track of where media is being used. We are still on Drupal 7, so we aren't using this yet, but when we go to Drupal 9 our plan is to start using the Media module. Of course, making sure your content editors are properly using this and replacing the document in the Media instance when there is a new version rather than making a new Media instance with the new document version, is a lot of the work.

Thanks!

Hello,

The U.S. Web Design System (USWDS) team will host the August USWDS monthly call on Thursday, August 20th at 2:30pm ET. Register today at <https://go.usa.gov/xfyeG>

This month, Dan Williams, USWDS product lead, is joined by Suran De Silva, User Experience Product Manager at the IRS, for a discussion about UX debt and how it can impact the quality of your products and services. Suran will cover what UX debt is, why it can be an issue, how to identify it, and tips to reduce UX debt in your work.

We'll also check out the newest changes and updates to the design system, and have a chance for Q&A.

This event is part of a monthly series that takes place on the third Thursday of each month. We post a video of each call at digital.gov/events shortly after the event.

Watch the video from last month's call to learn more about the design system's recent form component's updates!

Please keep in mind, this is a 2 hour webinar so it starts at 2 instead of the usual 3pm start time.

All,

Please share widely, especially with State/local/tribal units.

Colleagues,

In working with local Health Departments and Emergency Managers, it became clear that organizations are often having challenges producing materials that are usable by everyone during an emergency response. Not just members of the public with disabilities, but often mobile users, users in rural or limited technology areas, and people using auto-translation tools.

In an emergency, PDF is often used as it's the fastest "time to publish" for emergency information. However, it's not very usable, and making a PDF "fully accessible" can be time-consuming. However, just a few minutes effort can make it MUCH better.

Reach the most people with your documents, even in times of crisis. By learning the basics of PDF and document accessibility, your emergency communications will be in a position for maximum impact in minimal time.

Join us for "How to make PDFs accessible for emergency communications" on Thursday, August 20th from 1:30-2:30PM ET.

This training has been developed in collaboration with the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) and Deque Systems, Inc.

At the conclusion of this course, participants will be able to:

- Ensure PDFs you create have a basic set of common accessibility issues resolved, creating a better user experience for people with disabilities.
- Understand the basics of Adobe Acrobat Pro's "accessibility wizard."
- Set yourself up for in-depth, fuller-coverage accessibility testing in the future.
- Reach a larger audience by making your PDFs more consumable for all.

Register Now!

Notes:

- no general endorsement of Deque, Inc products or services by CDC is intended or implied.
- Deque will not use registrations for marketing purposes.
- This training is about improving PDF communications in an emergency, not making a PDF fully accessible.

Regards,

Hello web managers,

Thanks to those of you who attended Monday's community huddle. Plus, an extra big THANK YOU to Craig Collins-Young for proposing the topic and Dawn McCleskey for cohosting the huddle with me.

Over 125 community members joined the open-mic conversation on search and SEO. The 30 minutes went by too quickly! We discussed a variety of things related to search and SEO, including:

- Multilingual search
- Advanced search options
- Usability challenges
- Structured data

Attendees had all levels of experience —many simply want their search and SEO to work while several enthusiasts “want to tinker all day.” It was great to bring together experts and newcomers together in the same virtual room.

🔍 Let's continue the conversation from Monday's huddle on this listserv. Tell us about a recent challenge or success related to search and SEO.

If you haven't already, I encourage you to subscribe to the Digital.gov newsletter. Each week, the newsletter provides practical resources and tips, including information from other digital communities.

Please contact me at ammie.farrajfeijoo@gsa.gov if you have an idea for a topic for the next huddle.

I was surprised to see that so many agencies are using SOLR search in some capacity. For those that said SOLR, I'd be curious to know if you have direct access to its admin interface.

We're "powered" by SOLR (Acquia search), but we don't have direct access to any configuration beyond what's available in the Drupal Search API module.

If anyone wants to talk Search API configuration with Solr, let me know!

Hi Ammie,

I'd like to learn more about how agencies are optimizing for voice search. What are agencies doing in this area? Do we have best practices for optimizing government sites for voice search? Who's seeing success? What problems are you encountering? If you want to tackle a topic other than search for the next huddle, maybe we could discuss this later this year?

I'd also like to hear how agencies are doing with implementation of 21st Century IDEA. Our 2020 (executive branch) agency reports are due to OMB in December - what are agencies working on, and is there something GSA could be doing to help?

Thanks!

At OCC we use both SortSite and SiteImprove.

- SortSite (desktop product) is used for intranet scans to find broken links and 508 issues. It does an OK job at finding the broken links, but has a downside of getting bogged down if your site is too large. The way we run it, it must be initiated manually by a person on the team and it has to run on the computer for a long time.
- We also use SiteImprove (cloud service) on both our public and intranet sites.
  - But for our intranet we only use the site analytics module which is initiated by user clicks/JavaScript. The analytics are really good. Easier to understand than google analytics, but a little slower to run reports.
  - On the public sites we use analytics and the quality module. The quality module is very good and preferred to SortSite by our web specialists for resolving broken links, spelling, grammar and 508. We get a weekly report. Again, we only use the quality module (broken links and usability) on our public sites and not our intranet. The quality module must scan your content to find issues and our agency isn't willing to create a security exemption in order to allow SiteImprove to scan our internal sites.

Happy Monday, web managers!

The Federal Web Council, an interagency group of digital and web directors, meets regularly to collaborate across agencies and work together to improve federal digital services. We've heard from several of you that you'd like to hear more about what the Federal Web Council is working on, so we're going to send out occasional Council updates—and this is the first.

The Council met on Thursday, August 20, 2020, and was joined by the Digital.gov team. We discussed ways agency web/digital teams can collaborate with GSA and the Digital.gov team to create content, offer or attend training, share successes, and more. We encourage you to:

- Subscribe to the Digital.gov newsletter. Visit <https://digital.gov/about/subscribe/> and submit your email address.
- Encourage everyone on your team to join this Web Manager Community (and any other communities that interest you).
- If you have a story to share, let us know, and the Digital.gov team will work with you to develop it. As an example, they recently published a case study from HHS on how they're listening through their performance measurement program. Email the team at digitalgov@gsa.gov to share your story.

On another note, by mid-December, all federal executive branch agencies must submit their second annual report on progress implementing 21st Century IDEA. See, for example, GSA's 2019 report on its progress in implementing 21st Century IDEA at gsa.gov/digitalstrategy. GSA is drafting a template for our 2020 report, and we'll share that with you shortly. Though it's not required to use the template, you're welcome to use it to develop your report as well. Coordinate your reporting efforts with your agency CIO.

The Council met on Thursday, August 20, 2020, and was joined by the Digital.gov team. We discussed ways agency web/digital teams can collaborate with GSA and the Digital.gov team to create content, offer or attend training, share successes, and more. We encourage you to:

- Subscribe to the Digital.gov newsletter. Visit <https://digital.gov/about/subscribe/> and submit your email address.
- Encourage everyone on your team to join this Web Manager Community (and any other communities that interest you).
- If you have a story to share, let us know, and the Digital.gov team will work with you to develop it. As an example, they recently published a case study from HHS on how they're listening through their performance measurement program. Email the team at digitalgov@gsa.gov to share your story.

On another note, by mid-December, all federal executive branch agencies must submit their second annual report on progress implementing 21st Century IDEA. See, for example, GSA's 2019 report on its progress in implementing 21st Century IDEA at gsa.gov/digitalstrategy. GSA is drafting a template for our 2020 report, and we'll share that with you shortly. Though it's not required to use the template, you're welcome to use it to develop your report as well. Coordinate your reporting efforts with your agency CIO.

Does this mean there is a plan to kill the url shortener?

Cause this : "We're evaluating the future of the URL shortening solution" sure seems like you are.

Has there been less usage of it since it rolled out in 2009?

We ended up with Rebrand.ly because go.usa.gov will only handle internal .gov addresses. That messed us over on a lot of different fronts.

Lisa, there is an approved URL shortener. Any gov't employee can use it.

It's

<https://go.usa.gov/>

25 Most Popular Go.USA.gov Links | Go.USA.gov

Go.USA.gov has shortened 6,103,478 URLs that have been clicked 215,124,050 times.

go.usa.gov

Several have used it to shorten URLs that show up on the front page, the top 25 of them.

I use go.usa.gov ALL. THE. TIME!
It's my go-to shortner for any .gov links. I only use bit.ly if I can't use GO.
It's not only nice for getting shorter URLs, but also great for statistics and usage data.

Having access to GO as a free service has been really nice.

I answered the survey but wanted to pass along how much I value GO since the survey doesn't really distinguish between use of GO and other shortners.

One nice thing about owning a government website is that it's pretty trivial to alias a short URL – and have the added capability of creating custom URLs – and automating it. We forget that, sometimes. Not sure why...

Not to beat-up go.usa.gov, but I could easily see my customers using farmers.gov/7-random-characters. What's that? 5 minutes of tweaking in Drupal? An hour? Maybe this for folks on D7? <https://www.drupal.org/project/shurly>.

Better yet – someone write a nice D8 module and release it to the community. We need to do more of that sharing stuff.

Good afternoon:

Each year, the Department of the Treasury, Bureau of the Fiscal Service sends out a customer survey to approximately 20,000 members of the federal government financial management community asking for feedback on the services we provide to other government agencies. We use that important feedback to improve our services.

The survey is sent out on our behalf by Qualtrix using the address "Commissioner Timothy Gribben <noreply@gemailserver.com>"

There are certain agencies that block the above unless it is whitelisted. If it is blocked, our customers don't receive the survey and can't provide feedback.

Could you possibly check with your agency's IT staff to verify that the above address is whitelisted and if it is blocked, could you work with your IT staff to get it whitelisted?

We would really appreciate your help with this in order to make our survey effective.

Thank you very much.

Good afternoon, web managers!

To answer (b) (6) question directly, no, there is no plan to shut down Go.USA.gov at this time. However, we are currently evaluating the future of our URL shortener service based on some large infrastructure upgrades that will be needed to keep Go.USA.gov online. Through information collected through user interviews and survey data we hope to get a better understanding of how people are using our Go service, and how many people are actually using Go versus other commercial shorteners, as the landscape has changed significantly since we launched the service in 2009. The information collected will assist USAGov in determining the future direction of the service. Should there be any change to the service, we promise it will not be without notice.

Thank you,

The Go.USA.gov Team

Has there been less usage of it since it rolled out in 2009?

Good morning, web managers!

Do you use a URL shortener? The USAGov team wants to hear from government agencies that use any URL shortener for agency business. We're evaluating the future of the URL shortening solution we provide and we would appreciate getting your input.

Please take this short survey before September 4th; it should take you no longer than 15 minutes to complete.

ACCESS NYC (<https://access.nyc.gov/>) is a marketing site / aggregator of government benefits from Federal, NY State, and NYC levels for NYC Residents.
 It hosts information form 50+ benefits, programs, services in 11 languages.

Our team has been experimenting with Structured Data for Google Search, and including Special Announcements (<https://developers.google.com/search/docs/data-types/special-announcements#government-benefits-info-url>)

A question I'm wondering if anyone can help answer:

Regarding this field, would it make more sense for the url field to be the url of the authoritative administering agency, of our site's page, or something else?

- Special Announcements > governmentBenefitsInfo > url

Example:

Here's ACCESS NYC's Unemployment Insurance Program Guide (in Russian) - <https://access.nyc.gov/ru/programs/nys-unemployment-insurance/>

The page's Google Rich Results Test (which flags 'missing url' as an error): <https://search.google.com/test/rich-results?id=aZ3xwTthbdnsn386FQjcpA>

To resolve the 'missing url', do any of these urls make sense to use?

- Authoritative Agency Page: <https://www.ny.gov/services/get-unemployment-assistance>
- ACCESS NYC Page (in Russian): <https://access.nyc.gov/ru/programs/nys-unemployment-insurance/>
- ACCESS NYC Page (in English): <https://access.nyc.gov/programs/nys-unemployment-insurance/>
- something else?
- neither! we're doing this wrong!

Thanks!

Hi (b) (6) I believe that the url to include should be the url that has the in-depth information that the special announcement refers to. Generally, the search engines want the structured data to reflect content on web pages, and not to be unique content. So, whichever page has the information referenced briefly in the special announcement should be the target. There is a support group set up by Google for government agencies to get help with their Special Announcement implementation. To join see <https://developers.google.com/search/docs/data-types/special-announcements#troubleshooting> as they will be able to tell you exactly what they hope to see in that field! There is also an article on digital.gov that gets into the basics of setting up Special Announcement structured data: <https://digital.gov/2020/05/11/experimenting-with-specialannouncement-markup/> though you may be further along than the type of stuff it talks about. Sincerely, David Kaufmann USA.gov

Thanks for that info and those references David!

We discussed those a bit further and it seems there's 4 specific government program guides that we host that have had explicit / urgent COVID-19 related Special Announcements.

For now, we've only ended up adding the associated authoritative URL to these programs, and across these translations:

- Unemployment Insurance
- Emergency Food Assistance Program
- Economic Impact Payments
- Sick and Safe Leave

Hello!

I spied this on Apolitical.co, an online international community of government/civil servants, and thought it might be of interest to some. I don't know much about this opportunity specifically, but I've attended a few Apolitical webinars and enjoyed them.

Web managers,

We recently updated the banner in the U.S. Web Design System (USWDS). Please update your banner copy as soon as possible.

The banner is the component positioned above the header that identifies a site as an official government site. The updated banner now explains that the combination of an official .gov or .mil domain and a secure HTTPS connection are the best way to assure the public that they are connected to an official site.

Ahead of the release, we captured feedback around the banner. We also noted August 2019 research from USAGov that shows the banner is an effective way to help visitors understand that a U.S. government website is official and secure.

Based on this research, we updated the copy to make it more concise and clear. We also developed official language support for other languages, starting with Spanish. And, knowing that the .gov and .mil government top-level domains have specific usage and requirements, we developed a version of the banner for each top-level domain.

We encourage teams to update their banner copy as soon as possible. For additional background on why we made the update and details on what has changed, read the recent blog post or visit the component guidance to learn how to update your banner copy.

Hello All,

I'm curious if anyone has a system (or an idea of one) they are using to manage their website inventory?

Information like:

- Site (and related info path, server, ip, assets directory size etc...)
- Content (auditing accountability, outdated, etc...)
- Contributors (Editors / Webmaster)
- Users (analytics)

...an area where one could pull together information for developers all the way up leadership for example.

Thanks,
Jason

Hello!

The U.S. Web Design System (USWDS) team will host the September USWDS Monthly Call on Thursday, September 17 at 2:30 p.m. ET.

Register today by clicking here.

This month, Dan Williams, USWDS product lead, will introduce and demo three new components:

- Identifier. The identifier, a supplement to your standard site footer, discloses a site's parent agency and displays agency links required by federal policy.
- Time picker. The time picker is one of two new additions to the forms components that allow visitors to select a time from a drop-down menu.
- Step indicator. The step indicator is the second addition to the forms components that allow users to follow their progress in a step-by-step process.

We'll also check out the newest changes and updates to the design system, and have a chance for Q&A.

This event is part of a monthly series that takes place on the third Thursday of each month. We post a video of each call at digital.gov/events shortly after the event.

Watch the video from last month's call to learn more about the design system's recent form component's updates!

We don't have something that does all of those. But we did have an idea that would be focused on helping content specialists conduct content analysis without using the CMS itself.

We take all of our files and HTML and publish out the various metadata and body content fields as XML and to a database. Then we built a search interface that allows the team to search the content by site or any relevant metadata field.

So if you are diligent about putting in fields like author, last audit/review data, last updated date (system updated) you can use the system to quickly assess content by site.

I export:

- 100-percent content inventory from SEO Spider, a desktop spidering program
- Traffic, search landings, referrers, device use, from Google Analytics
- Mobile Usability Problems reports from Google Search Console
- Survey data from Qualtrics
- CMS template names from our CMS
- CMS activity (page promotion) report
- Partial accessibility scan using axe-core custom script

I use Python to build two tables and some reports. For the Page table I roll up things like broken links, up to the page level, a count and the text – ending up with one row per page. For the Content Group table I summarize everything to the organizational owner and “communication package” / information architecture level, and import into Tableau.

Can share more offline if interested.

Hi, Web Managers!

Did you know that all federal executive branch agencies are required to report to OMB by December 20 on our progress to implement PL 115-336, the 21st Century Integrated Digital Experience Act?

At GSA, we've developed a template for our 2020 report, and I'm sharing it with you, in case you find it useful for your own reporting purposes. See attached Word doc.

1. Use of this template is OPTIONAL; your agency is free to develop its own report format. You may also include your update as part of a pre-existing reporting mechanism such as your agency's congressional justification, instead of submitting a separate report.
2. Agency CIOs are tasked in the law with submitting their agency's progress reports, so you will need to coordinate with your agency CIO, and your Federal Web Council Rep, to develop and submit your report.
3. Agencies must also publish this report online; we're publishing our report on our gsa.gov/digitalstrategy page. For consistency, please consider publishing your report on your agency.gov/digitalstrategy page, as well.

Contact your agency's Web Council Rep with questions.

Thanks!
-Rachel

Subject: [Non-DoD Source] [CONTENT-MANAGERS-L] Sharing - optional reporting template for 21st Century IDEA

Hi, Web Managers!
Did you know that all federal executive branch agencies are required to report to OMB by December 20 on our progress to implement PL 115-336, the 21st Century Integrated Digital Experience Act?

At GSA, we've developed a template for our 2020 report, and I'm sharing it with you, in case you find it useful for your own reporting purposes. See attached Word doc.

1. Use of this template is OPTIONAL; your agency is free to develop its own report format. You may also include your update as part of a pre-existing reporting mechanism such as your agency's congressional justification, instead of submitting a separate report.
2. Agency CIOs are tasked in the law with submitting their agency's progress reports, so you will need to coordinate with your agency CIO, and your Federal Web Council Rep, to develop and submit your report.
3. Agencies must also publish this report online; we're publishing our report on our gsa.gov/digitalstrategy page. For consistency, please consider publishing your report on your agency.gov/digitalstrategy page, as well.

Contact your agency's Web Council Rep with questions.

Thanks!
-Rachel

Hello again Content Managers,

I reached out a couple of weeks ago with a CMS questionnaire, and I received a lot of great feedback (all of which happened to be from Drupal users). I wanted to request feedback again, this time from AFPIMS users. I would also love to hear from Adobe AEM and Sitecore users as well, if there are any out there.

If you're willing to help by answering a brief questionnaire I've put together, please email me at (b) (6), (b) (7)(C)civ@mail.mil - The feedback I received for Drupal the first go-around was very helpful and eye-opening. I hope to receive that sort of feedback for AFPIMS, AEM, or Sitecore as well.

Greetings Content Managers,

I am researching options for a new CMS and I'd like to learn more details on both the migration process and personnel requirements. Was hoping to solicit this community for some answers for my research. I would love to know how long it took you to launch, whether you needed to hire any additional personnel, and other questions along these lines.

If you have been involved in the process of migrating your web content onto a new CMS platform and would be willing to answer some questions I have, please let me know! Systems of interest are mostly Drupal, AEM, Sitecore, and AFPIMS at this time, but any experience with migration and implementation would be useful.

Hi Folks,

I wouldn't normally "advertise" a software convention here, but there have been at least a couple of inquiries on the list about content management systems (I'm assuming for contracting purposes).

So, hey, y'all know there's a Drupal GovCon going on right now? They've had (and will continue to have) sessions about contracting, capabilities, accessibility, etc., all today and some of tomorrow – and the sessions have been recorded. Better interactivity on the live sessions, though.

Here you go: <https://www.drupalgovcon.org/>

Enjoy.

I guess it would depend on a lot of factors (amount of data, how many different rounds, if you have lots of different content types to migrate, etc. but one of the biggest is how well your current content fields and formats match up with your new (target) CMS.

We have not done it ourselves and had data migrated for us, but there are always niggling issues or thing you might manually have to fix. It is good to have at least 2-3 test rounds to check and fix/redo. Good to have testers check in detail, and if you can do each content type or otherwise segment it out (so you don't do EVERYTHING) at once helps with testing to make sure you had a chance to thoroughly check things.

That said, when we did a complete rebuild (where we went from a mixed bag of WP and AquaLogic to Drupal) we opted to have everything manually re-entered. We have decentralized content creation, where each agency manages their own content. So this accomplished both getting the content in (from a mish mosh to a structured central system) AND the training for the authors/editors, since they needed to learn the tool to be able to get the content entered! Then we had a small amount that the central admin group needed to work on and populate. This also took care of populating new content fields we had added in the redesign.

Not sure if this answers your question directly, but hope it gives you a sense of variables to consider.

Hi (b) (6), (b) (7)(C)

I think it depends on what your goal is. Is your goal just to move to a new system? Are you redesigning concurrently? Will you be restructuring information architecture?

Navy.mil recently moved from an obsolete custom built Microsoft CMS to AFPIMS and we also performed a design change and restructured content. The design documentation was provided prior to launching the migration however we had a couple of designers to fill in gaps of documentation. We had a team of three developers developing modules for the new design, a database administrator, testers, a content curation team of twenty-ish sailors re-categorizing content-- 100k photos, 25k stories, among other content. We officially started the migration in July of 2019 and launched this past July 2020. So although there was a lot of great work going on prior to the actual migration effort, it technically took a full year to get to what was deemed our minimum viable product.

But (b) (6) is totally correct. It depends on what your effort entails and the size of the resources you have access too. We actually lucked out as we had some projects put on hold because of the pandemic. We were able to leverage a lot more of our team to help with the content curation.

This is just glossing over our migration. Hopefully it helps and I'm glad to answer any other specific questions you have. And good luck with your migration!

Thank you,

Good to have testers check in detail, and if you can do each content type or otherwise segment it out (so you don't do EVERYTHING) at once helps with testing to make sure you had a chance to thoroughly check things.

That said, when we did a complete rebuild (where we went from a mixed bag of WP and AquaLogic to Drupal) we opted to have everything manually re-entered. We have decentralized content creation, where each agency manages their own content. So this accomplished both getting the content in (from a mish mosh to a structured central system) AND the training for the authors/editors, since they needed to learn the tool to be able to get the content entered! Then we had a small amount that the central admin group needed to work on and populate. This also took care of populating new content fields we had added in the redesign.

Not sure if this answers your question directly, but hope it gives you a sense of variables to consider.

Greetings Content Managers,

I am researching options for a new CMS and I'd like to learn more details on both the migration process and personnel requirements. Was hoping to solicit this community for some answers for my research. I would love to know how long it took you to launch, whether you needed to hire any additional personnel, and other questions along these lines.

If you have been involved in the process of migrating your web content onto a new CMS platform and would be willing to answer some questions I have, please let me know! Systems of interest are mostly Drupal, AEM, Sitecore, and AFPIMS at this time, but any experience with migration and implementation would be useful.

Thank you

Hi (b) (6), (b) (7)(C)

You are embarking on one of the all-time challenging assignments for web managers, that has only gotten more complex through the ages. I have been involved in multiple migrations over the years, so I have a trove of artifacts I've held onto. I'm sharing some of the best ones for a shake-out by you or others who may want to dive in when they get a migration assignment - hope it helps!

- h/t to Tony Bryne of Real Story Group and formerly of GSA for his "realistic schedule" worksheet (screenshot below) which details the many steps to build into your schedule
- A copy of my rough schedule and tasks for the DHS migration in 2012
- A copy of my strategic plan that spells out the steps, etc. to document the project with our leadership, project team and community of practice/web council

It would be wonderful if you could share the results of your survey of the current platforms out there – I'm sure the results will be interesting to me and others on this forum. I commend you on taking this type of approach to the choices before you...

All the best,

Kathy

Program vision

- Vision

To leverage web communications as a strategic business and communications asset and improve customer service across DHS.gov

- Mission

- Improve the user experience
- More effectively invest resources and use technology based on agency priorities
- Support and professionalize the DHS HQ web workforce
- Leverage web communications to tell the DHS story

Guiding Principles for DHS.gov

1. The site will have a clearly defined purpose outlined in an overarching communication goal/statement
2. The entire site uses template based rather than hand-coded html page-based publishing, allowing staff to focus on adding value to content rather than the mechanics of design or web publishing
3. Publish once, publish everywhere: database driven content flows across the site based on content types and required subject matter tagging; publishing allows content to display in multiple sections of the site
4. To maintain quality and currency and minimize the risks associated with out-of-date or conflicting content, all site sections require a clear but flexible governance structure, with defined roles, processes, and management accountability
5. Content invites user feedback wherever possible and appropriate
6. Sharing of content by public visitors is easily done
7. Presentation of content follows industry good practices for reaching and engaging specific audiences and ensuring search engine optimization
8. Information architecture is driven by the needs of defined priority audiences and DHS communication goals related to those audiences
9. Site sections and content categories are named and arranged to maximize accessibility to the external user
10. All information on a given topic is aggregated and integrated in a single site section, but specific content items can be cross-promoted, displaying in more than one section
11. Content on the headquarters site is organized around DHS units only in sections devoted to organizational information about those units; we are customer-centric instead of organization-centric in how we organize information

Executive Summary

This document summarizes the FY2012 web strategy for the headquarters website (DHS.gov). The plan lays out high-level strategic goals and provides objectives and tangible action items along with a timeline for achieving these goals. The goals and objectives in this plan are consistent with and in support of the Secretary's Action Directive on Web Systems Optimization and the 2011 Executive Order 13571 Streamlining Service Delivery and Improving Customer Service. The driving situation for this action is a combination of the need to move toward a more efficient, effective CMS and the hard stop on September 31st to the current FEMA contract that is funding the Mt. Weather hosting site that DHS.gov currently resides on. To ensure there is ample time to adjust and address any issues, the hard deadline for the redesign and migration of DHS.gov to the new CMS and new commercial hosting site is 1 September 2012.

Goals

Business goals

- Consolidation of HQ websites leveraging technology and innovation
  - Restructure DHS.gov to provide a consolidated resource for priority topics in a unified voice
  - Move to decentralized publishing at HQ
  - Move to a database-driven CMS
  - Move hosting from current DHS/FEMA environment to a commercial hosting site
- Customer service standards for the web
  - Adopt consistent page layouts by content type and standard functional modules
  - Move from org-centric to customer-centric structure
  - Eliminate duplication
  - Eliminate old and no longer relevant content
- Improve search performance
- Develop a comprehensive archival policy, process and practice
- Identify and adopt a training program for web content providers including a "helpdesk" like function.

Branding goals

- Tag-line/message? Idea: Homeland security is hometown security
- Look and feel: single branding theme/skin across all HQ component pages/sections on DHS.gov with the ability to highlight program specific landing pages subject to OPA approval

Target users

- Reviewing our current visitor demographics and what they look at and do on our site will provide a foundation for overall IA planning. This information by itself won't determine the IA/taxonomy but must be taken into account when developing the site redesign. The final direction will be determined by having a clearly defined purpose for the website; laying out key DHS communication goals for the site and defining and prioritizing key audiences and what they want out of our site.

- By frequency – We know that about two thirds of our visitors are new or infrequent (43% in most recent survey) and that their satisfaction scores are lowest; We need to format and package our content to meet their expectations for a quick at-a-glance experience that puts their top tasks within easy reach
- By segment:
  - Business
  - First responders
  - Government (Federal, state, local, tribal, territorial)
  - International travelers
  - Job seekers
  - Law Enforcement and other first responders
  - Media
  - Students and academia
  - Travelers

General tasks

- Fully define primary functions of DHS.gov. Some current functional areas are:
  - Tell the story of DHS – what we are doing and why
  - Conduct business (transactions with citizens, contracts/grants and jobs)
  - Share information about incidents
  - Engage the public on policy issue related to DHS mission
  - Move people/communities/organizations to take action on public safety matters
  - Provide access to data, including raw data on immigration stats and publications
- Baseline current top tasks (based on domain experience only due to lack of analytics data). Need to do additional research to determine what top tasks our priority audiences have.
  - Get forms
  - Find a job
  - Check e-verify
  - File a travel complaint
  - Use biometric identification (the last of our top five typically rotates with seasonal interest items such as grants, hurricanes, etc.)
- Identify any gaps in functions, content, etc... that our priority audiences would need and want.

Critical success factors

- Clearly defined purpose for the DHS website, communicating to prioritized audiences in a way that achieves key communications goals

- Become a standards organization using common templates for content page types on a database-driven CMS
- Adopt consistent methods of measuring performance
- Develop a sustainable staff infrastructure and a distributed publishing model
- Develop a short and long-term funding strategy

Technology constraints

- This tool will only be for editorial content cleared for public web use, not applications
- Web hosting requires multiple environments (development, testing/preview, live)
- Roles and permissions need to be provisioned so some content managers have ability to make changes in the navigation without dependency on OCIO
- A common content repository will allow us to stem duplication
- Known weaknesses in Drupal require workarounds (versioning, enterprise workflow, document handling)

Key Implementation Milestones

- Draw the blueprint
  - Governance and discovery (complete)
  - Content audit and consolidation (in progress)
  - Develop plan for our platform, general IA and overview of taxonomy.
  - Coordinate draft timeline (should be attached to this plan) with OCIO/ESDO and other key active partners.

- Build the foundation
  - Technology selection and requirements (complete)
  - Roles and responsibilities for content migration IPT finalized,
  - Partnerships negotiated and project manpower/funding secured
  - Build the basic redesign structure. Information architecture and taxonomy
  - Approve content and functional specifications for common page types; select modules
  - Design and theming
  - Develop detailed migration plan with detailed steps and testing included
  - Migrate existing content to new system (30% of the effort)

- Manage the lifecycle
  - Dot gov management reforms (including metrics)
  - Testing and due diligence
  - Develop a process for managing feedback
  - Content publishing training and help desk operations
  - Future planning

Goals, Objectives, Action items

Business Goal #1: New CMS, new design, new hosting – HQ website consolidation leveraging technology and innovation

Objective 1.1: Restructure dhs.gov to provide a consolidated resource for priority topics in a unified voice

Action item 1.1.1 – Create a priority topic index for “microsites” informed from three sources: users (via available research), business units (via their response to federal domain survey); and administration (via a list to be vetted with S-1 from OPA) [Also see related action item 2.2]

Action item 1.1.2 – Review existing site structure with in-house web experts to examine taxonomy and navigation paths to include information from the content audit activity (dependent on 1.3.1) and other existing data

Action item 1.1.3 – Conduct quick online interviews with 8 to 10 users identified from our email list that includes an examination of their top tasks and issues with the current site

Action item 1.1.4 – Develop wireframes with information architecture proposal

Objective 1.2: Move to decentralized publishing at headquarters

Action item 1.2.1 – Identify current headcount for those at HQ involved in web publishing

Identify gaps in content and content providers

Action item 1.2.2 – Develop a workflow model with appropriate roles and responsibilities to include content creator, content approver and content publisher

Action item 1.2.3 - Institute Transition Publishing Plan to include one FTE assisting with publishing to DHS.gov and only HQ web liaisons authorized to promote work for publishing; service level agreements will be suspended for the duration and submissions will be evaluated based on S-1 and OPA priorities; secretarial and statutory publishing requests will get first priority and other projects may be delayed during the transition.

Action item 1.2.4 – Help desk and training plan from OCIO coordinated and approved OPA. (Will be given to Web Council for review and adoption for other components as they move onto the new CMS and hosting platform).

Action item 1.2.5 – Training strategy, curriculum and draft end user training material created

- OPA to harmonize editorial guidelines and complete SOPs
- OCIO to provide documentation and user guides for Drupal publishing

Action item 1.2.6 - OCIO to stand up help desk and online resources for CM help, to include account management. Help desk operations should include:

- support for deficiency reports and change requests to be logged and prioritized for action;
- ticket and tracking system to monitor resolution;

- a transparent process to log bugs and enhancement requests and check status of known issues;
- a unified online hub of information to share program documentation, best practices, a glossary of terms and lessons learned

Action item 1.2.6 – Training program fielded to include basic Drupal publishing and best practices in web communications for web content managers

Action item 1.2.7 – Training program fielded for developers on governance and guidelines for module development, with OCIO in partnership with Web Council platform requirements committee

Objective 1.3: Move to a database Web-CMS

Action item 1.3.1: content audit in partnership with HQ Liaisons

Action item 1.3.2: web content strategy, basic IA and design approach approved by OPA senior leadership and DHS front office

Action item 1.3.3: Delivery of redesign and migration requirements to ESDO and follow-on meeting to assure alignment on expectations (complete)

Action item 1.3.4: Design and theme development

Action item 1.3.5: Identify a best value automated script to facilitate in consultation with DHS.gov systems administrator

Action item 1.3.6: Review content inventory post-purge and tag content into three tiers: content that serves a topic in the IA or helps a target audience with a top task; content that is directly relevant to a topic in the IA; everything else (to be part of a searchable collection)

Action item 1.3.7: manually prep the content and update where needed to bucket into phases with correct tag for the phase it is scheduled for with FY 2012 web activities

- Phase 1: (Target: July 1, 2012) Top level of site is fielded (top level navigation, landing pages, secondary navigation, footer navigation, sitemap); navigation to concentrate on topics based on research about what is popular with users, what is a priority for business units and administration priorities
- Phase 2: (Target: August 30, 2012 ) Resource directories; This will be content that is curated to include recommended reading based on organizational priorities for identified topic areas; each item in the directory should have a short description of no more than 20 words

- Phase 3: (Target: Sept. 1, 2012) Video and photo assets; Because there is no plan to field a digital asset management module in the FEMA build the migration of DHS photos and videos must be delayed
- Phase 4: (Target: Sept. 1, 2012) Searchable collection (delta of rest of content); All content to be coded with appropriate meta-data using the Dublin Core to assure good search engine optimization

Action item 1.3.8: Adjust content in new CMS to make it fit properly (visually and within the information architecture)

Action item 1.3.9: Integrate third party tools including Google Analytics (if approved); Gov Delivery API, Akamai configuration and social media

Action item 1.3.10: Map content to new IA; analysis, parsing of content, and review and acceptance by responsible department representatives before it can be migrated

Action item 1.3.11: Launch site in beta format at www.homelandsecurity.gov to exist alongside legacy site for a sufficient period to receive public feedback via our satisfaction surveys and use of Ideascale public dialogue

Action item 1.3.12: Review and acceptance of site parsing of content by responsible departments after launch

Action item 1.3.13: Review public feedback and make necessary adjustments prior to shifting from beta publication to publishing at a single site;

Action item 1.3.14: Redirect www.dhs.gov to the new domain and configure redirects to select high traffic pages. Also adjudicate which shortcuts move forward on the new platform.

Action item 1.3.14: Document cost avoidance for Efficiency Review reporting to ESC

Business Goal #2: Adopt customer service standards for the web

Objective 2.1: Adopt consistent page layouts by content type and standard modules

Action item 2.1.1: Approve common page types ranked high, medium and low

Action item 2.1.2: Quality assurance and best practices on modules; Scan federal Drupal adopters for modules that merit consideration by DHS and QA review for proposed solutions for enterprise

Objective 2.2: Move from org centric to customer centric structure; accomplish this by identifying priority topics for topic pages; to include

Action item 2.2.1: Topics important to the Administration

Action item 2.2.2: Top tasks for users as called out by the key communication goals and priority audiences approved by senior DHS OPA leadership with input from HQ components

Action item 2.2.3: Priority topics for users culled from available sources (satisfaction survey data, GovDelivery data, legacy webtrends data and search data)

Objective 2.3: Move from org centric to customer centric structure; measure this by:

Action item 2.3.1: Receive a web scorecard evaluation from a panel of independent web experts

Action item 2.3.2: Delivery of Metrics Guide outlining KPI standards, guidelines and recommendation for analytics, usability, satisfaction, business goals and search

Objective 2.3: Eliminate duplication

Action item 2.3.1: Create a common content repository on the new platform so URLs in the multi-tenant environment can easily share and republish content

Action item 2.3.2: Assure business rules are published with new workflow and training roll-out to emphasize the need to publish once use links or syndication to share across platforms

Objective 2.4: Eliminate old content

Action item 2.4.1: Identify media storage and develop protocols for moving and accessing legacy content, including necessary VM Ware Install

Action item 2.4.2: Baseline back-up of entire site

Action item 2.4.3: Move content identified as archival to datacenter 2 (accessible via tape)

Action item 2.4.4: Delete content that is out of date including eliminating any orphaned content that is identified in the audit or post-audit review.

Action item 2.4.5: Draft and coordinate a web archive policy and process

Action item 2.4.6: Move archived content from datacenter 2 to a sub-domain at archive.dhs.gov so it is accessible when required

Business Goal #3: Improve Search Performance

Objective 3.1: Implement the USASearch Affiliate offering from GSA with an API to have the same look and feel as DHS.gov; Develop SOPs for using the content manager features within the application

Objective 3.2: Baseline tuning of algorithm for USASearch

Objective 3.3: Identify domains to be included in enterprise search and configure spider search behavior on USASearch implementation so DHS.gov searches across multiple agency domains

Objective 3.4: Review content audit to identify level of effort for addressing gaps in SEO for title tags and descriptions

Objective 3.5: Train new content publishers in use of USASearch and SEO skills, including the Dublin Core meta-tag standards, to optimize HTML and PDF documents

Objective 3.6: Conduct SEO on all HTML and PDF documents in the searchable collection phase of the content migration project

Challenges

Immature policy. The Web Management Directive, written in 2003, is out of date with current operations. It is scheduled to be rewritten in FY12 and will absorb the relevant action directives.

Content audit. We are collecting input from content owners across HQ. Extensions from the January 31 deadline will be given to February 3 and thereafter OPA will take ownership of content review activities.

Metrics. Awaiting Delegation of Authority to OPA to be able to implement the new policy and procedures for using Google Analytics.

Staffing. As we shift to a decentralized publishing model we will need cooperation from HQ support components for providing timely support for this new role.

Calendar of events. We plan to have only one contractor doing legacy content maintenance for the duration of the content migration project, and we are under a moratorium for new page templates for the duration. We must scope and prioritize our work to operate within these constraints to support scheduled web publishing activities for the budget roll-out, Cyber Exercises, FEMA grants and Hurricane season

Archival and record management responsibilities. We are operating without a formal archive policy but in consultation with records management have a plan to pull content suitable for archive to the datacenter pending stand-up of a public facing archive site in FY13

Assumptions

DHS.gov will remain a HQ site and operational components will continue to have their own domains and independent websites, albeit on a common Web CMS Platform with a common content repository.

The new site will use the domain www.homelandsecurity.gov and be launched first in beta format with www.dhs.gov still live to gather feedback and do further testing and remediation; After the beta has launched the www.dhs.gov domain will be redirected to the www.homelandsecurity.gov homepage.

User-centered design will inform decision-making on navigation and design themes selected.

Representation and feedback from each of the HQ support components is a critical success factor for managing our content with a new decentralized workflow; Their role includes doing a content audit and later assisting with SEO; Content that is targeted to be deleted or archived will be moved to Data Center 2 and available on tape with a plan to transfer this to a public facing archives site in FY2013.

Content approvals for publishing will be done within the Drupal platform instead of the email and word document process now in use at DHS.gov, and a new workflow will identify appropriate individuals across the organization to perform this role. Full internal clearance for public release on the content need to be accomplished before it even gets to the publishing process.

Because the entire site will uses template based rather than page-based publishing, allowing staff to focus on adding value to content rather than the mechanics of design or web publishing, custom page web design will be minimized in the future. Any requests will need to be approved by OPA.

All references to staff include full time government employees as well as contract support personnel; OPA contract support must remain in place for the duration of the build to support the Web Migration IPT. Assistance from other HQ office, components and other Federal agencies will be required to fully meet the goals and deadlines of this plan.

The scope of the project is limited. Intranet and HSIN sites are not in scope. Applications will remain where they are and not move with DHS.gov. Website consolidation for other sites will be done as an after action to moving the current DHS.gov website content to the new platform and hosting site.

Schedule | Drupal GovCon

In this session we will discuss a bit about why and how we implemented the VA.gov CMS (Drupal 8) as a backend Content API to feed a decoupled, Metalsmith static HTML build and deployment system for the frontend.

CLASSIFICATION: UNCLASSIFIED

Greetings Content Managers,

I am researching options for a new CMS and I'd like to learn more details on both the migration process and personnel requirements. Was hoping to solicit this community for some answers for my research. I would love to know how long it took you to launch, whether you needed to hire any additional personnel, and other questions along these lines.

If you have been involved in the process of migrating your web content onto a new CMS platform and would be willing to answer some questions I have, please let me know! Systems of interest are mostly Drupal, AEM, Sitecore, and AFPIMS at this time, but any experience with migration and implementation would be useful.

Thank you

Hi Content Managers!

USAGov recently interviewed social media users to get their thoughts about URL shorteners. As a bonus, we came away with some good insights about the different ways they use Facebook and Twitter, and whether users recognize or care whether a social media account or link is official. Find out more from the latest USAGov Blog post.

We're always experimenting and learning new ways to use data and technology to connect people with their government. We'd love for you to learn along with us, and subscribe to the blog.

Thanks,

Nancy

Hi everyone.

tl;dr - We're investigating how to solve Instagram's 1-link limit. If you've got a workaround, please let us know. Our folks would like to interview you to learn more.

Here's the longer version for those who are now scratching their heads. ;)

Unlike Twitter, Facebook, etc., Instagram doesn't let you provide live links from posts. Sure, you can paste a URL in the description, but it won't be linked, leaving users to have to copy/paste it into a browser. Not ideal.

Instagram does give you a link from the account bio (aka profile). One link. Not two, not three. One. Which would be fine if they allowed you to link from each post.

The easiest solution is to link to your website's home page, but that leaves Instagram followers to stumble around the site looking for content related to that post that just got their attention enough to leave them hungry for more. Also not an ideal experience.

Two general options seem to have emerged. In both cases, you call attention to your solution by ending each post with something like "see bio link for more."

1) Link to a page of links, which probably isn't updated too often. This can work if your Instagram posts generally fall into certain categories. For example, if you post a lot about, oh, let's see ... astronaut pets (Probably not a real NASA thing. Probably. NASA folks, care to comment?) ... you might have a link on that page to "Astronauts and their pets." Still not ideal, but at least anyone interested in more info about a photo of an astronaut and their cat can get to the right general place.

And hey, maintaining a static list of links is easy.

2) Link to a constantly-updated set of links. Those can be text, but the platinum-level solution is to use the same photo as what's on each Instagram post to link to more info about that post. And if you do it right, you could have something you log into that both posts to Instagram and updates the links page so you don't have to log into two systems.

Third-party services have emerged to provide both solutions, but hey, we're the gummint! We can build our own! More to the point, by building our own, we can meet all federal requirements, including not handing our followers' info over to sites that don't share our strong privacy protections.

What, you want examples? I got examples!

Solution 1: <http://linktr.ee/> lets you keep a page of links. The first example they provide on their home page is Selena Gomez. No real connection between her Instagram posts and her Linktree page.

But really, it's easy to imagine maintaining a list of links.

Solution 2: Anthropologie: look at how their Instagram feed is mirrored by their bio link page. Can you say "seamless experience"? Or at least "as seamless a workaround as could exist"? The New York Time is another example: Instagram | bio link page

Heyyyy - not bad for a guy who'd never heard of this issue before Tuesday.

So - if you've got a solution, we want to talk to you!

You could leverage the "Share To..." function of the IG post, either using an app or write a service that takes text (like a Twilio SMS receiver) or email. A Lambda task, etc. – takes the link that IG populates and parses off the appropriate ID, matches it up in a db/lookup, and fires back the link you want them to visit. "As a service." So from the user perspective something along the lines of, "Share this post via text message to 5551212 to receive a direct link! We don't retain your data, our 'no spam guarantee.'" and/or instructions in the bio for same.

Hello, Does anyone have links they can share of web pages with customer satisfaction surveys embedded at the bottom of the page? We're working on a two-question survey, and it would help to see examples of how similar surveys look on live webpages.

Thank you!

Two things:

- 1) Great Section 508 and other resources on that page you directed us to--very helpful!
- 2) I noticed you work in Translational Sciences. Do you happen to know of any high-quality, inexpensive resources you would recommend for learning either Arabic or Persian? I have friends in the region and I keep toying with learning one or both of the languages. However, enrolling in language classes at a university is a bit more money than I'm comfortable spending at the moment. Any ideas??

Regardless, thanks for contributing to the conversation and have a great weekend!

Commerce.gov's implementation is partially modeled on USPTO's original implementation from 2014 (©*) – so if folks want to check out ours – you can by scrolling to the bottom of the page here: <https://www.uspto.gov/trademarks-getting-started/why-hire-private-trademark-attorney>. We also expose the actual counts publicly as an accountability mechanism for our employees to improve their 'unhelpful' content...

USPTO also has the "foresee pop-up" that everyone else uses as well, which asks the requires CX questions from OMB.

Hope this info is helpful!

+1 to the Commerce.gov example! And if anyone is already using Siteimprove Analytics, they have a new Feedback feature for simple pop-up survey that you can customize for different pages/languages. It requires no additional code on your site beyond the existing Siteimprove code, and is 508 compliant.

For example, on ATF.gov, all our Q&A pages have this simple 2-part survey (in English and Spanish): <https://www.atf.gov/firearms/qa/which-firearms-are-regulated-under-nfa>

Generally, that is true, but there are apps and browser plugins now that add functionality to either the operating system or the browser to read QR code images in HTML pages. One would just tap, or tap and hold on the QR code image and a menu would appear to read the code. People would have to have the app installed to be able to do it, but it does work. Maybe the link in the bio page can list all the apps that do that for each operating system or browser plugin and suggest they install it. However, as a federal agency maybe that would be seen as promoting something, hard to tell. It's an idea.

Question about the QR idea – assuming most people are using IG on a phone, wouldn't you need a second phone for scanning the QR code in order for this to work? One phone to display the image, a second one to use the camera function to take a picture and go to the QR code?

A quick search of IG on my phone to find a QR coded image to test (I used #QRcodetattoo) makes it seem like that is the case.

P.S. For people who do physical take-aways for events – QR code temporary tattoos raise some interesting possibilities. (See article on marketers doing it here and here, and WaPo's "this trend is already over" take from 2012)

You could leverage the "Share To..." function of the IG post, either using an app or write a service that takes text (like a Twilio SMS receiver) or email. A Lambda task, etc. – takes the link that IG populates and parses off the appropriate ID, matches it up in a db/lookup, and fires back the link you want them to visit. "As a service." So from the user perspective something along the lines of, "Share this post via text message to 5551212 to receive a direct link! We don't retain your data, our 'no spam guarantee.'" and/or instructions in the bio for same.

Hi everyone.

tl;dr - We're investigating how to solve Instagram's 1-link limit. If you've got a workaround, please let us know. Our folks would like to interview you to learn more.

Here's the longer version for those who are now scratching their heads. ;)

Unlike Twitter, Facebook, etc., Instagram doesn't let you provide live links from posts. Sure, you can paste a URL in the description, but it won't be linked, leaving users to have to copy/paste it into a browser. Not ideal.

Instagram does give you a link from the account bio (aka profile). One link. Not two, not three. One. Which would be fine if they allowed you to link from each post.

The easiest solution is to link to your website's home page, but that leaves Instagram followers to stumble around the site looking for content related to that post that just got their attention enough to leave them hungry for more. Also not an ideal experience.

Two general options seem to have emerged. In both cases, you call attention to your solution by ending each post with something like "see bio link for more."

1) Link to a page of links, which probably isn't updated too often. This can work if your Instagram posts generally fall into certain categories. For example, if you post a lot about, oh, let's see ... astronaut pets (Probably not a real NASA thing. Probably. NASA folks, care to comment?) ... you might have a link on that page to "Astronauts and their pets." Still not ideal, but at least anyone interested in more info about a photo of an astronaut and their cat can get to the right general place.

And hey, maintaining a static list of links is easy.

2) Link to a constantly-updated set of links. Those can be text, but the platinum-level solution is to use the same photo as what's on each Instagram post to link to more info about that post. And if you do it right, you could have something you log into that both posts to Instagram and updates the links page so you don't have to log into two systems.

Third-party services have emerged to provide both solutions, but hey, we're the gummint! We can build our own! More to the point, by building our own, we can meet all federal requirements, including not handing our followers' info over to sites that don't share our strong privacy protections.

What, you want examples? I got examples!

Solution 1: <http://linktr.ee/> lets you keep a page of links. The first example they provide on their home page is Selena Gomez. No real connection between her Instagram posts and her Linktree page.

But really, it's easy to imagine maintaining a list of links.

Solution 2: Anthropologie: look at how their Instagram feed is mirrored by their bio link page. Can you say "seamless experience"? Or at least "as seamless a workaround as could exist"? The New York Time is another example: Instagram | bio link page

Heyyyy - not bad for a guy who'd never heard of this issue before Tuesday.

So - if you've got a solution, we want to talk to you!

Rather than trying to make Instagram what it isn't to fit our needs, shouldn't we be more focused on tailoring our content to fit the platform and its consumers? Instagram is what it is because that's what its consumers want. They don't want to be directed to other content. I understand that as content managers or public affairs specialists we want to direct traffic to our content, but it's not about that with Instagram. Different medium ... different audience ... different engagement.

I agree with you in general. We're definitely not looking for solutions that make people install something or change how they use Instagram, nor do I want to change the images we post.

That said, when companies like the NY Times and Anthropologie, and celebrities like Selena Gomez, provide links to more content, it tells me at least some Instagram users do want more info at least some of the time. Generally, that is true, but there are apps and browser plugins now that add functionality to either the operating system or the browser to read QR code images in HTML pages. One would just tap, or tap and hold on the QR code image and a menu would appear to read the code. People would have to have the app installed to be able to do it, but it does work. Maybe the link in the bio page can list all the apps that do that for each operating system or browser plugin and suggest they install it. However, as a federal agency maybe that would be seen as promoting something, hard to tell. It's an idea.

Question about the QR idea – assuming most people are using IG on a phone, wouldn't you need a second phone for scanning the QR code in order for this to work? One phone to display the image, a second one to use the camera function to take a picture and go to the QR code?

A quick search of IG on my phone to find a QR coded image to test (I used #QRcodetattoo) makes it seem like that is the case.

P.S. For people who do physical take-aways for events – QR code temporary tattoos raise some interesting possibilities. (See article on marketers doing it here and here, and WaPo's "this trend is already over" take from 2012)

You could always add a QR code to your post, embed it in an image, and when people scan it, it will take them to the appropriate web page.

You could leverage the "Share To..." function of the IG post, either using an app or write a service that takes text (like a Twilio SMS receiver) or email. A Lambda task, etc. – takes the link that IG populates and parses off the appropriate ID, matches it up in a db/lookup, and fires back the link you want them to visit. "As a service." So from the user perspective something along the lines of, "Share this post via text message to 5551212 to receive a direct link! We don't retain your data, our 'no spam guarantee.'" and/or instructions in the bio for same.

Subject: [CONTENT-MANAGERS-L] Solving the Instagram 1-link policy

Hi everyone.

tl;dr - We're investigating how to solve Instagram's 1-link limit. If you've got a workaround, please let us know. Our folks would like to interview you to learn more.

Here's the longer version for those who are now scratching their heads. ;)

Unlike Twitter, Facebook, etc., Instagram doesn't let you provide live links from posts. Sure, you can paste a URL in the description, but it won't be linked, leaving users to have to copy/paste it into a browser. Not ideal.

Instagram does give you a link from the account bio (aka profile). One link. Not two, not three. One. Which would be fine if they allowed you to link from each post.

The easiest solution is to link to your website's home page, but that leaves Instagram followers to stumble around the site looking for content related to that post that just got their attention enough to leave them hungry for more. Also not an ideal experience.

Two general options seem to have emerged. In both cases, you call attention to your solution by ending each post with something like "see bio link for more."

1) Link to a page of links, which probably isn't updated too often. This can work if your Instagram posts generally fall into certain categories. For example, if you post a lot about, oh, let's see ... astronaut pets (Probably not a real NASA thing. Probably. NASA folks, care to comment?) ... you might have a link on that page to "Astronauts and their pets." Still not ideal, but at least anyone interested in more info about a photo of an astronaut and their cat can get to the right general place.

And hey, maintaining a static list of links is easy.

2) Link to a constantly-updated set of links. Those can be text, but the platinum-level solution is to use the same photo as what's on each Instagram post to link to more info about that post. And if you do it right, you could have something you log into that both posts to Instagram and updates the links page so you don't have to log into two systems.

Third-party services have emerged to provide both solutions, but hey, we're the gummint! We can build our own! More to the point, by building our own, we can meet all federal requirements, including not handing our followers' info over to sites that don't share our strong privacy protections.

What, you want examples? I got examples!

Solution 1: <http://linktr.ee/> lets you keep a page of links. The first example they provide on their home page is Selena Gomez. No real connection between her Instagram posts and her Linktree page.

But really, it's easy to imagine maintaining a list of links.

Solution 2: Anthropologie: look at how their Instagram feed is mirrored by their bio link page. Can you say "seamless experience"? Or at least "as seamless a workaround as could exist"? The New York Time is another example: Instagram | bio link page

Heyyyy - not bad for a guy who'd never heard of this issue before Tuesday.

So - if you've got a solution, we want to talk to you!

Hi.

For our friends working on USWDS: when did that widget first launch? It's nice! We're going to look into using it, and I have the repository already.

Just wondering its history - how long ago did it launch? I probably missed an email somewhere ...

For anyone wondering what I'm talking about, you can see it in action at the top of my last agency's pages: <https://www.uscis.gov/>

We first released the government banner on October 6, 2016 ... exactly four years ago today!

We updated the banner a couple of months ago. We made the copy more concise and clear and now provide official language support for other languages, starting with Spanish.

Research from USAGov that shows the banner is an effective way to help visitors understand that a U.S. government website is official and secure. We encourage all teams to add the banner on official federal websites that use a .gov or .mil domain and HTTPS.

Colleagues-

I'm aware that the Federal compatible TOS agreements is sadly no longer active. We're looking for a survey tool (like Survey Gizmo, SurveyMonkey, Google Survey, etc.) where an agency has an active TOS in force. We plan to survey about 400 participants and the survey questions would include email addresses. In particular, we want to be certain that email addresses won't be sold and would protect other collected data confidentiality.

Please reach out to me directly and I'll summarize if there's interest. Thank you!

If you use Instagram stories, you can add a link to the story. (The "swipe up for more" that you see on a lot of stories from corporations.) I believe that unless you do some funky hacks, you need at least 10,000 Instagram followers to have this feature.

Instagram is what it is because that's what its consumers want. They don't want to be directed to other content. I understand that as content managers or public affairs specialists we want to direct traffic to our content, but it's not about that with Instagram. Different medium ... different audience ... different engagement.

Generally, that is true, but there are apps and browser plugins now that add functionality to either the operating system or the browser to read QR code images in HTML pages. One would just tap, or tap and hold on the QR code image and a menu would appear to read the code. People would have to have the app installed to be able to do it, but it does work. Maybe the link in the bio page can list all the apps that do that for each operating system or browser plugin and suggest they install it. However, as a federal agency maybe that would be seen as promoting something, hard to tell. It's an idea.

Question about the QR idea – assuming most people are using IG on a phone, wouldn't you need a second phone for scanning the QR code in order for this to work? One phone to display the image, a second one to use the camera function to take a picture and go to the QR code?

A quick search of IG on my phone to find a QR coded image to test (I used #QRcodetattoo) makes it seem like that is the case.

P.S. For people who do physical take-aways for events – QR code temporary tattoos raise some interesting possibilities. (See article on marketers doing it here and here, and WaPo's "this trend is already over" take from 2012)

You could always add a QR code to your post, embed it in an image, and when people scan it, it will take them to the appropriate web page.

You could leverage the "Share To..." function of the IG post, either using an app or write a service that takes text (like a Twilio SMS receiver) or email. A Lambda task, etc. – takes the link that IG populates and parses off the appropriate ID, matches it up in a db/lookup, and fires back the link you want them to visit. "As a service." So from the user perspective something along the lines of, "Share this post via text message to 5551212 to receive a direct link! We don't retain your data, our 'no spam guarantee.'" and/or instructions in the bio for same.

Hi everyone.

tl;dr - We're investigating how to solve Instagram's 1-link limit. If you've got a workaround, please let us know. Our folks would like to interview you to learn more.

Here's the longer version for those who are now scratching their heads. ;)

Unlike Twitter, Facebook, etc., Instagram doesn't let you provide live links from posts. Sure, you can paste a URL in the description, but it won't be linked, leaving users to have to copy/paste it into a browser. Not ideal.

Instagram does give you a link from the account bio (aka profile). One link. Not two, not three. One. Which would be fine if they allowed you to link from each post.

The easiest solution is to link to your website's home page, but that leaves Instagram followers to stumble around the site looking for content related to that post that just got their attention enough to leave them hungry for more. Also not an ideal experience.

Two general options seem to have emerged. In both cases, you call attention to your solution by ending each post with something like "see bio link for more."

1) Link to a page of links, which probably isn't updated too often. This can work if your Instagram posts generally fall into certain categories. For example, if you post a lot about, oh, let's see ... astronaut pets (Probably not a real NASA thing. Probably. NASA folks, care to comment?) ... you might have a link on that page to "Astronauts and their pets." Still not ideal, but at least anyone interested in more info about a photo of an astronaut and their cat can get to the right general place.

And hey, maintaining a static list of links is easy.

2) Link to a constantly-updated set of links. Those can be text, but the platinum-level solution is to use the same photo as what's on each Instagram post to link to more info about that post. And if you do it right, you could have something you log into that both posts to Instagram and updates the links page so you don't have to log into two systems.

Third-party services have emerged to provide both solutions, but hey, we're the gummint! We can build our own! More to the point, by building our own, we can meet all federal requirements, including not handing our followers' info over to sites that don't share our strong privacy protections.

What, you want examples? I got examples!

Solution 1: <http://linktr.ee/> lets you keep a page of links. The first example they provide on their home page is Selena Gomez. No real connection between her Instagram posts and her Linktree page.

But really, it's easy to imagine maintaining a list of links.

Solution 2: Anthropologie: look at how their Instagram feed is mirrored by their bio link page. Can you say "seamless experience"? Or at least "as seamless a workaround as could exist"? The New York Time is another example: Instagram | bio link page

Heyyyy - not bad for a guy who'd never heard of this issue before Tuesday.

So - if you've got a solution, we want to talk to you!

Beth,

SurveyMonkey published USG-friendly terms publicly back in 2013 and they appear to continue to be in force - see <https://www.surveymonkey.com/mp/legal/terms-of-use-federal-government/>. Back when we were negotiating terms frequently, we would point to the SurveyMonkey model as a best practice for companies to consider.

Amendment to SurveyMonkey Terms of Use Applicable to U.S. Government Users and Subscribers | SurveyMonkey

This Amendment is an agreement between SurveyMonkey Inc. including its affiliates (collectively, " SurveyMonkey ") and the United States Government and applies to any U.S. Government agency users and account holders, who use or access the Services (the " Agency " or " you ").

www.surveymonkey.com

Qualtrics took a similar tack, and as a bonus, they are also FedRamp'd.

Greetings,

I am researching options for upgrading from Drupal 7 to either Drupal 8 or 9. I am hoping that this community will share which version they upgraded to and would love to know why that version was chosen.

If you would share what you experienced, lessons learned, road blocks, the plus/minus of that Drupal version upgrade, I would greatly appreciate it.

Thanks much!

9 doesn't have all the modules ready yet. Most are compatible, but not all.

And I don't think there's exactly a drupal 7 to 9 upgrade path. 8 has a relatively easy path if all the modules have been updated.

So, if you're planning now, I'd suggest 8 but keep an eye on the modules you're planning to use for D7 versioning for a better path to 9.

Agreed, we're in the process of moving from D7 to D8 now and it's a more substantial upgrade. The move from D8 to D9, which we plan to make late next year is minor, not a platform and code migration. I shared this info from a blog I found with my team, might be helpful to you. From D8 to D9, you'll need to:

- look at code and module deprecations (Drupal will note these)
- make sure any custom modules you have are compatible with Drupal 9 (if you build a D8 site now, you can plan and make them compatible)
- update the core codebase to D9 and run update.php

Subject: [CONTENT-MANAGERS-L] Migration to Drupal 8 or 9 Experience/Feedback

Greetings,

I am researching options for upgrading from Drupal 7 to either Drupal 8 or 9. I am hoping that this community will share which version they upgraded to and would love to know why that version was chosen.

If you would share what you experienced, lessons learned, road blocks, the plus/minus of that Drupal version upgrade, I would greatly appreciate it.

Thanks much!

Kathy

Hi Kathy,

I take it that none of the advertising for late September's Drupal GovCon hit home? There's a @DrupalGovCon Twitter account out there. If you follow it, you'll likely be among the first to find out when the recorded sessions are all posted with polished captions. There's a possibility that some of the content will be worth a peek. I found the Friday keynote to be quite excellent. You might find the sessions focused on migration to be more on-point.

Greetings,

I am researching options for upgrading from Drupal 7 to either Drupal 8 or 9. I am hoping that this community will share which version they upgraded to and would love to know why that version was chosen.

If you would share what you experienced, lessons learned, road blocks, the plus/minus of that Drupal version upgrade, I would greatly appreciate it.

Thanks much!
 Kathy

Hi all:

We're excited to announce the Web Analytics Playbook on digital.gov!

We created this resource (which isn't DAP-specific) for anyone implementing or reporting from a web analytics tool, based on questions we're often asked. The playbook contains considerations for strategy, implementation, configuration, reporting, and action. We hope it proves useful to you, especially if you are someone managing your own analytics tool on a gov site.

Take a look, and let us know what you think!

Happy analyzing,

The Digital Analytics Program Team

Hi Kathy,

If you asked me last year, I would say D8 for sure, but after watching recent DrupalGovCon presentations it seems the suggestion is D7 → D9. Keep in mind that D8 and D9 are pretty similar at the higher level but a big architecture and platform change and all Drupal gurus strongly suggestion to treat this “change” as new development from scratch. It is a big “change” not an “upgrade” as we know. And from my personal experience who went thru two significant Drupal upgrades, don’t ever fool yourself with “as-is” migration which means that you need to dumbbed-down a high tech system to mimic an old system that you are trying to get rid of. Untangling dumbbed-down version to really take advantage of the “true new” system will be a lot more pain. Especially from D7 to D8 or D9, it is a big change.

Also looking at the end-of-support schedule, D8 support seems to end 2021 Q4 with the end-of-life of Symphony 3 (The State of Drupal 9 from 2019 Drupal GovCon) and you’ll be looking for another upgrade soon if you’ll go for D8:

I suggest you take a look at Future Proof Your Drupal Sites for D9, one of Drupal GovCon presentations on YouTube.

Hope this helps and good luck...

Hi Kathy,

I take it that none of the advertising for late September’s Drupal GovCon hit home? There’s a @DrupalGovCon Twitter account out there. If you follow it, you’ll likely be among the first to find out when the recorded sessions are all posted with polished captions. There’s a possibility that some of the content will be worth a peek. I found the Friday keynote to be quite excellent. You might find the sessions focused on migration to be more on-point.

There's updated info about the release, bugfix and security schedule for 8.8.x, 8.9.x 9.0.x, 9.1.x and 9.2.x in this blog post from just over one week ago <https://www.drupal.org/about/core/blog/drupal-910-alpha1-will-be-released-the-week-of-october>.

Drupal 8.9.x will have security coverage from the community for 5 months longer than 9.0.x, so depending on your schedule, it might be better to target launching with 8.9.x and plan a small project afterward to upgrade to 9.1.x or 9.2.x.

Hi Kathy,

If you asked me last year, I would say D8 for sure, but after watching recent DrupalGovCon presentations it seems the suggestion is D7 → D9. Keep in mind that D8 and D9 are pretty similar at the higher level but a big architecture and platform change and all Drupal gurus strongly suggestion to treat this "change" as new development from scratch. It is a big "change" not an "upgrade" as we know. And from my personal experience who went thru two significant Drupal upgrades, don't ever fool yourself with "as-is" migration which means that you need to dumb-down a high tech system to mimic an old system that you are trying to get rid of. Untangling dumb-down version to really take advantage of the "true new" system will be a lot more pain. Especially from D7 to D8 or D9, it is a big change.

Also looking at the end-of-support schedule, D8 support seems to end 2021 Q4 with the end-of-life of Symphony 3 (The State of Drupal 9 from 2019 Drupal GovCon) and you'll be looking for another upgrade soon if you'll go for D8:

I suggest you take a look at Future Proof Your Drupal Sites for D9, one of Drupal GovCon presentations on YouTube.

Hope this helps and good luck...

Hi Kathy,

I take it that none of the advertising for late September's Drupal GovCon hit home? There's a @DrupalGovCon Twitter account out there. If you follow it, you'll likely be among the first to find out when the recorded sessions are all posted with polished captions. There's a possibility that some of the content will be worth a peek. I found the Friday keynote to be quite excellent. You might find the sessions focused on migration to be more on-point.

Greetings,

I am researching options for upgrading from Drupal 7 to either Drupal 8 or 9. I am hoping that this community will share which version they upgraded to and would love to know why that version was chosen.

If you would share what you experienced, lessons learned, road blocks, the plus/minus of that Drupal version upgrade, I would greatly appreciate it.

Thanks much!

Good day ,

I'm not sure if this is the appropriate forum to ask for your inputs but here goes:

BLUF: My home agency conducted a strategic review of the Communications Officer (CO) and Public Affairs Officer (PAO) work roles to assess whether or not they should be consolidated into a single work role. Their findings indicated the two workroles should be combined. However, in looking at their assessment, I have some questions/concerns.

Has anyone in this group undergone this type of assessment or study regarding these two workroles? If so, what were your findings? Pros? Cons? Do you have both work roles and how is that working for you?

I conducted a quick search on USAJobs and it seems the search agent is poor and was surprised at some other findings:

Strategic Communications Specialist:L 2,762 total openings (850 open to the public)
-some do advise on external communications activities but largely internal communications

Public Relations: 333 total openings (105 open to the public)
The search for Public Relations also yielded Chief Communications officer, Program Analysts and other odd titles.

If you would like for me to share the assessment, I'm happy to do so.

Thanks in advance!

I think that a lot of agencies use Communications Officer when they should use Public Affairs Officer. They way to tell used to be the career code, Public Affairs career code is 1035, so if the title is Communications Officer but the career code is 1035 then it is Public Affairs. Unfortunately they don't include the code in the announcements on USAJOBS, even though you can "filter" with codes.

The way agencies title positions seem to always go away from the official OPM titles, like I know and agency that used Public Engagement Officer – but that doesn't really exist. On the surface it seems like these were duplicative roles, unless Communications Officer's role was more technical and in charge of the infrastructure for all types of communications (which I have seen) but that was career code 2210.

I am sure this doesn't help at all, but that's my two cents.

Hey Steven, I hope this finds you well.

Thanks for the helpful insights. I'm a HR professional but studied and have assumed comms/new technology/strategic planning roles over the past 5 years. I am probably over thinking this scenario but always want to do my due diligence especially if decisions may impact future promotions or transition opportunities for the workforce.

I've been a PA officer which I dealt with the public more heavily. Now, I'm considered a Strategic Comms Officer and I do not often deal with the general public. It seems dishonest to say that I am a PA officer when I don't have dealings with the public. I guess I've seen stranger things.

There is the digital media engagement competency and that could include internal and external audiences and fall into either bucket as well. Much like you suggested for the public engagement officer role.

Thanks again and stay safe out there.

Hi all,

Hoping there are some metadata mavens out there who can help us out.

We want to shore up our metadata standards and have a few issues to hash out so we can provide clear guidance to our agency's 100+ content contributors. For the most part, these folks are economists/researchers who produce reports and data products. We're mostly dealing with PDFs and Excel files.

We have a fairly minimal approach regarding metadata and simply require that content contributors fill out the file properties: title, author(s), company/organization, subject/description, and keywords.

A few questions:

1. What is the proper format for the authors field? FirstName LastName or LastName, FirstName? What if there are multiple authors? Should it be James Smith; James Jones; James Wilson or should it be Smith, James; Jones, James; Wilson, James. Is semicolon the proper punctuation to separate the names? Or should you do James Smith and James Jones and James Wilson? Or James Smith, James Jones, James Wilson? Does it matter?
2. Is it necessary to include your organization/agency in the keywords field if it's already in the company field?
3. These reports and data products go through extensive review, and we have been seeing that changes to the metadata don't always seem to stick. Or quotation marks are introduced to the keywords or authors fields when they weren't there before (or when a file goes from Word to PDF). Is there anything we can do to prevent this? Or, does it even matter if there are quotes? Adobe seems to want to add them, so is this on purpose or a glitch?

Greatly appreciate any insight.

Thanks,
Eric

Hi Eric,

Interesting questions. I have dealt with metadata a little, but I have to ask what is your goal for using metadata? Is it for SEO or is there a local indexer that harvests the metadata? If the goal is for SEO then I suggest doing some research on how metadata is used with each search engine. If it is for another purpose then see how that local indexer works.

To simplify things my agency doesn't post Excel or Word documents we convert them to PDFs, that way all metadata is entered in the same way and in the same place. Acrobat also has tools for accessibility that makes it very easy to comply with section 508.

To answer your questions:

1. Depends on your goals and how the indexer reads the metadata. Otherwise I don't think it matters as long as it is consistent.
2. If it is in the company field, then it's probably not necessary and is duplicative.
3. If eventually the documents will be converted to PDF then why not just start with that and make all posted documents PDF? Simplifying the process and using only one format to post might help. Quotation marks in metadata isn't a bad thing and in certain cases makes it easier to extract.

That's my two cents.
Steve

Subject: [CONTENT-MANAGERS-L] Metadata / File Properties

Hi all,

Hoping there are some metadata mavens out there who can help us out.

We want to shore up our metadata standards and have a few issues to hash out so we can provide clear guidance to our agency's 100+ content contributors. For the most part, these folks are economists/researchers who produce reports and data products. We're mostly dealing with PDFs and Excel files.

We have a fairly minimal approach regarding metadata and simply require that content contributors fill out the file properties: title, author(s), company/organization, subject/description, and keywords.

A few questions:

1. What is the proper format for the authors field? FirstName LastName or LastName, FirstName? What if there are multiple authors? Should it be James Smith; James Jones; James Wilson or should it be Smith, James; Jones, James; Wilson, James. Is semicolon the proper punctuation to separate the names? Or should you do James Smith and James Jones and James Wilson? Or James Smith, James Jones, James Wilson? Does it matter?
2. Is it necessary to include your organization/agency in the keywords field if it's already in the company field?
3. These reports and data products go through extensive review, and we have been seeing that changes to the metadata don't always seem to stick. Or quotation marks are introduced to the keywords or authors fields when they weren't there before (or when a file goes from Word to PDF). Is there anything we can do to prevent this? Or, does it even matter if there are quotes? Adobe seems to want to add them, so is this on purpose or a glitch?

Greatly appreciate any insight.

Thanks,
Eric

Hello All,

Have any Google Analytics users made plans to upgrade to Google Analytics 4 (https://blog.google/products/marketingplatform/analytics/new\_google\_analytics/), or already done so? I'm trying to divine its particular value to public websites. I understand the aspect of Google targeting future support for GA4, and its potential supplemental benefit as the use of third-party cookies declines. I just wonder if there is an "immediate" case to be made for conversion/upgrade by government sites.

Thanks for any insight and perspective.

Alternatively, has anyone been working with any of the more privacy-oriented analytics solutions?

Over time, I've become more and more sensitive to the sort of data we're providing to Google, merely for the privilege of using Google Analytics. You may know that I've had a hand in purging at least one major federal website of unnecessary tracking by social media companies – and if it weren't for the DAP, I'd probably take a more serious look at purging GA from my current AO (There's not much point in purging GA from a site, if we're just going to provide Google with access to our users under the DAP umbrella).

Now, if you'll excuse me, I need to adjust my chapeau of tin lamé.

The DAP team has begun early stages of examination of GA4. From my novice understanding of it now, it is quite a significant change, complete with a different data schema. We're working to set up a GA4 property in parallel so that we can start examining features. Our GA vendor relayed that the current "GA3" or Universal Analytics properties aren't likely to be "decommissioned" anytime soon (through 2021). So, to William's question: I am not sure if there are "immediate" needs, but it may be beneficial to consider standing up a parallel GA4 property to get familiar.

As for other, more privacy-focused analytics tools: there are quite a few available, and the two I see most often are Matomo and Fathom. It appears on the surface that those tools do not yet have the capacity to scale to a system as large as DAP, with 4-5B hits per month. I'd love to know if any agencies are using them on individual sites, though. My hunch is that those tools aren't in much significant usage--please let us know if you do!

Tim,

Thanks for the feedback. I'm sure we all look forward to benefitting what you share from your reexamination of GA4. It should be an interesting comparison when running parallel with Universal Analytics if, indeed, the data schema is vastly different.

The DAP team has begun early stages of examination of GA4. From my novice understanding of it now, it is quite a significant change, complete with a different data schema. We're working to set up a GA4 property in parallel so that we can start examining features. Our GA vendor relayed that the current "GA3" or Universal Analytics properties aren't likely to be "decommissioned" anytime soon (through 2021). So, to William's question: I am not sure if there are "immediate" needs, but it may be beneficial to consider standing up a parallel GA4 property to get familiar.

As for other, more privacy-focused analytics tools: there are quite a few available, and the two I see most often are Matomo and Fathom. It appears on the surface that those tools do not yet have the capacity to scale to a system as large as DAP, with 4-5B hits per month. I'd love to know if any agencies are using them on individual sites, though. My hunch is that those tools aren't in much significant usage--please let us know if you do!

Over time, I've become more and more sensitive to the sort of data we're providing to Google, merely for the privilege of using Google Analytics. You may know that I've had a hand in purging at least one major federal website of unnecessary tracking by social media companies – and if it weren't for the DAP, I'd probably take a more serious look at purging GA from my current AO (There's not much point in purging GA from a site, if we're just going to provide Google with access to our users under the DAP umbrella).

Now, if you'll excuse me, I need to adjust my chapeau of tin lamé.

Hello All,

Have any Google Analytics users made plans to upgrade to Google Analytics 4 (https://blog.google/products/marketingplatform/analytics/new\_google\_analytics/), or already done so? I'm trying to divine its particular value to public websites. I understand the aspect of Google targeting future support for GA4, and its potential supplemental benefit as the use of third-party cookies declines. I just wonder if there is an "immediate" case to be made for conversion/upgrade by government sites.

Thanks for any insight and perspective.

Hi folks,

Chiming in here after a much-needed vacation, but hopefully my response is helpful.

There are services that do this (i.e. Later's "Link in bio" tool), however if you would prefer to drive users directly to your domain (a good practice), there are options.

When I ran social at the Peace Corps, I worked with the web team to set up a landing page at <https://www.peacecorps.gov/instagram>. In essence, it's a simple page with square images, each of which has a link associated. My workflow went like this:

1. Upload image to web with link
2. Post to Instagram, directing users to the link in bio (which was always the same: peacecorps.gov/Instagram)
3. Users can tap the link in your bio, then find whatever image is associated with the link, click on it, et voila.

The beauty of this method is that it enables users to find links from past posts, not just your most recent. Is it an extra step? Sure. Is it worth it? Absolutely.

Happy Monday!

If you use Instagram stories, you can add a link to the story. (The "swipe up for more" that you see on a lot of stories from corporations.) I believe that unless you do some funky hacks, you need at least 10,000 Instagram followers to have this feature.

I agree with you in general. We're definitely not looking for solutions that make people install something or change how they use Instagram, nor do I want to change the images we post.

That said, when companies like the NY Times and Anthropologie, and celebrities like Selena Gomez, provide links to more content, it tells me at least some Instagram users do want more info at least some of the time. I mean, the fact that commercial services have sprung up suggests it's a pretty common desire among brand followers (personal, commercial, and government). Why miss that opportunity?

So if there's a relatively straightforward way to do that, I'd like to pursue it.

Rather than trying to make Instagram what it isn't to fit our needs, shouldn't we be more focused on tailoring our content to fit the platform and its consumers? Instagram is what it is because that's what its consumers want. They don't want to be directed to other content. I understand that as content managers or public affairs specialists we want to direct traffic to our content, but it's not about that with Instagram. Different medium ... different audience ... different engagement.

Generally, that is true, but there are apps and browser plugins now that add functionality to either the operating system or the browser to read QR code images in HTML pages. One would just tap, or tap and hold on the QR code image and a menu would appear to read the code. People would have to have the app installed to be able to do it, but it does work. Maybe the link in the bio page can list all the apps that do that for each operating system or browser plugin and suggest they install it. However, as a federal agency maybe that would be seen as promoting something, hard to tell. It's an idea.

Question about the QR idea – assuming most people are using IG on a phone, wouldn't you need a second phone for scanning the QR code in order for this to work? One phone to display the image, a second one to use the camera function to take a picture and go to the QR code?

A quick search of IG on my phone to find a QR coded image to test (I used #QRcodetattoo) makes it seem like that is the case.

P.S. For people who do physical take-aways for events – QR code temporary tattoos raise some interesting possibilities. (See article on marketers doing it here and here, and WaPo's "this trend is already over" take from 2012)

You could leverage the "Share To..." function of the IG post, either using an app or write a service that takes text (like a Twilio SMS receiver) or email. A Lambda task, etc. – takes the link that IG populates and parses off the appropriate ID, matches it up in a db/lookup, and fires back the link you want them to visit. "As a service." So from the user perspective something along the lines of, "Share this post via text message to 5551212 to receive a direct link! We don't retain your data, our 'no spam guarantee.'" and/or instructions in the bio for same.

Hi everyone.

tl;dr - We're investigating how to solve Instagram's 1-link limit. If you've got a workaround, please let us know. Our folks would like to interview you to learn more.

Here's the longer version for those who are now scratching their heads. ;)

Unlike Twitter, Facebook, etc., Instagram doesn't let you provide live links from posts. Sure, you can paste a URL in the description, but it won't be linked, leaving users to have to copy/paste it into a browser. Not ideal.

Instagram does give you a link from the account bio (aka profile). One link. Not two, not three. One. Which would be fine if they allowed you to link from each post.

The easiest solution is to link to your website's home page, but that leaves Instagram followers to stumble around the site looking for content related to that post that just got their attention enough to leave them hungry for more. Also not an ideal experience.

Two general options seem to have emerged. In both cases, you call attention to your solution by ending each post with something like "see bio link for more."

1) Link to a page of links, which probably isn't updated too often. This can work if your Instagram posts generally fall into certain categories. For example, if you post a lot about, oh, let's see ... astronaut pets (Probably not a real NASA thing. Probably. NASA folks, care to comment?) ... you might have a link on that page to "Astronauts and their pets." Still not ideal, but at least anyone interested in more info about a photo of an astronaut and their cat can get to the right general place.

And hey, maintaining a static list of links is easy.

2) Link to a constantly-updated set of links. Those can be text, but the platinum-level solution is to use the same photo as what's on each Instagram post to link to more info about that post. And if you do it right, you could have something you log into that both posts to Instagram and updates the links page so you don't have to log into two systems.

Third-party services have emerged to provide both solutions, but hey, we're the gummint! We can build our own! More to the point, by building our own, we can meet all federal requirements, including not handing our followers' info over to sites that don't share our strong privacy protections.

What, you want examples? I got examples!

Solution 1: <http://linktr.ee/> lets you keep a page of links. The first example they provide on their home page is Selena Gomez. No real connection between her Instagram posts and her Linktree page.

But really, it's easy to imagine maintaining a list of links.

Solution 2: Anthropologie: look at how their Instagram feed is mirrored by their bio link page. Can you say "seamless experience"? Or at least "as seamless a workaround as could exist"? The New York Time is another example: Instagram | bio link page

Heyyyy - not bad for a guy who'd never heard of this issue before Tuesday.

So - if you've got a solution, we want to talk to you!

Hi all,

I am working on deploying Salesforce Government Cloud for my program (flood insurance) and I am looking at various points of integration with our websites and how to best use available development resources.

Do you have any kind of integration between your agency or program website and a CRM? If so, what kind of integration and what CRM? If not, why not?

Do you offer direct customer engagement/customer service on your website such as live chat with an agent and/or chat bot? Contact form?

How do you capture web engagement and/or customer satisfaction with your website in your overall (360 degree) view of your customer?

Any lessons learned? Tips?

Thank you in advance!

Hi Content Managers!

Our program has seen a lot of interns come and go over the decades. And so many have made great contributions to USAGov and gained experience to help launch their careers.

In the latest USAGov blog post, we asked our recent intern, Jessie Chen, to share some tips she learned during her year with us. Her insights can help managers and interns understand each other and work together to create the best experience for everyone.

We're always experimenting and learning new ways to use data and technology to connect people with their government. We'd love for you to learn along with us, and subscribe to the blog.

Hello,

Over the years we used to display hundreds of our email addresses on the website as "email" - sort of like this:

(b) (6)

Director

(b) (6)

Word "Email" is a link. Masking was done to supposedly keep the spammers away. Not sure how it could help, given that those email addresses are still available in the source code. But, the bigger issue is that this approach has alienated and/or annoyed multiple users whose browsers were not configured to open the desirable email/webmail client by default. In this case, users would hit the "Email" link relentlessly, then complain (usually call) that our email is "broken."

To fix this, one could either put a link (that nobody usually looks at) to the lengthy instructions on how to configure those browsers so they open the desirable email client when an "Email" link is clicked on, or simply walk the upset user through the process over the phone. Often users would not even know what a browser is. In any situation, it's an ultimate case of severe user unfriendliness. In addition, after multiple complaints, the departmental content providers began posting the full email address, so people actually could use it. We ended up with the inconsistent display of email addresses.

Then someone has come up with an idea to create hundreds of forms, so every employee in the City could be contacted via the form. There were quite a few cons to it: the attachments - types of the files and sizes, plus senders would not have a chance to add the email address to their contact list, something else, I forgot already.

In addition, as we've discovered, having multiple names on the page and a word "Email" next to them is against 2.4.4 accessibility compliance - the same link texts can not be used for multiple different destinations. I suppose the solution to that would be saying "Email to Rick Smith" instead of just saying "Email." But the "broken" email would not go away in this case either.

As to displaying email addresses just as they are (myemail@annapolis.gov) which is the majority's preference and perfect user-friendliness, there are two concerns: possible spam (albeit we have really good spam filters) and possible accessibility issues - it appears the screen reader reads email address letter-by-letter, which, I suppose doesn't make any sense to blind people.

I'm sure there is a perfect solution for it and I must find it: we are in a process of the site redesign and will have to make changes to the hundreds of email addresses - as they are displayed on the site.

If anybody found this solution and is happy with it, please do share. THANK YOU!

I believe you have hit on an important issue that you have explained very well, and one that I faced a few years ago. Before I explain what I did, I would like to make a few comments.

First, in my humble opinion, the purpose for having email links on a web page is to communicate with someone so the end result should concentrate on that. So, the issue about not being able to add the email address to their contact list is not the purpose I would be concerned about. But, if there is a valid concern about that, then there are ways to fix that.

Second, email harvester bots can cause a lot of problems! Some examples include providing an authentic looking spoof email because it came from a real agency email address, causing a denial of service event by over powering the email and/or spam filter system, or a foreign government bad actor sending emails that even if you preview the message can download some undetectable harmful code. These and more happen I've seen it. So in my viewpoint it is necessary to NOT publish emails if you can get away with it.

Third, user experience is very important so the solution should keep that in mind.

Now, here's what I did. I created a database of personnel to include their email address. The website is capable of sending emails via SMTP. I put a single form on the website so when a user clicks on a button it would open this form. The button has an id that is passed to the form which will be used to query the database. The email address is never exposed and the form is simple. It also has the capability to attach one file which is uploaded in a separate process - types of files, size, etc is all configurable and validated upon upload. Most email systems have a 10 to 20 MB file attachment limit so I mirrored that limit. I also added a captcha field to increase security and prevent auto-submitting bots from attempting to hack the system.

It's not a perfect solution, but since I launched this system spam emails went down 90% and we haven't have any denial of service attacks. Plus, it provided a way for our end users to send an email to staff in an easy, convenient, and secure way. Purpose fulfilled.

Many years ago, we handled email addresses on the site with some CSS tricks. Since harvesters were scanning source code, we wrote the email addresses and email link to the code, backwards. Then we would use CSS to reverse the direction of the email on the front-end. This way the front-end link and display would read properly, but the harvester wouldn't find a legit email address in the code.

We stopped doing that several years ago as email spam filtering improved and we changed email systems. Not sure how effective that trick would be nowadays, but it did cut down spam when it was implemented.

Thank you, Steven! Does it work well on mobile devices? How about the attachments? And files types and size limitations? Any other issues at all? I'd have to accommodate/provide with ways to communicate with citizens hundreds of employees.

Thank you again!

First, in my humble opinion, the purpose for having email links on a web page is to communicate with someone so the end result should concentrate on that. So, the issue about not being able to add the email address to their contact list is not the purpose I would be concerned about. But, if there is a valid concern about that, then there are ways to fix that.

Second, email harvester bots can cause a lot of problems! Some examples include providing an authentic looking spoof email because it came from a real agency email address, causing a denial of service event by over powering the email and/or spam filter system, or a foreign government bad actor sending emails that even if you preview the message can download some undetectable harmful code. These and more happen I've seen it. So in my viewpoint it is necessary to NOT publish emails if you can get away with it.

Third, user experience is very important so the solution should keep that in mind.

Now, here's what I did. I created a database of personnel to include their email address. The website is capable of sending emails via SMTP. I put a single form on the website so when a user clicks on a button it would open this form. The button has an id that is passed to the form which will be used to query the database. The email address is never exposed and the form is simple. It also has the capability to attach one file which is uploaded in a separate process - types of files, size, etc is all configurable and validated upon upload. Most email systems have a 10 to 20 MB file attachment limit so I mirrored that limit. I also added a captcha field to increase security and prevent auto-submitting bots from attempting to hack the system.

It's not a perfect solution, but since I launched this system spam emails went down 90% and we haven't have any denial of service attacks. Plus, it provided a way for our end users to send an email to staff in an easy, convenient, and secure way. Purpose fulfilled.

Subject: [CONTENT-MANAGERS-L] Displaying Email Addresses on the Web in an Accessible Way

Hello,

Over the years we used to display hundreds of our email addresses on the website as "email" - sort of like this:

(b) (6)

Director

(b) (6)

Word "Email" is a link. Masking was done to supposedly keep the spammers away. Not sure how it could help, given that those email addresses are still available in the source code. But, the bigger issue is that this approach has alienated and/or annoyed multiple users whose browsers were not configured to open the desirable email/webmail client by default. In this case, users would hit the "Email" link relentlessly, then complain (usually call) that our email is "broken."

To fix this, one could either put a link (that nobody usually looks at) to the lengthy instructions on how to configure those browsers so they open the desirable email client when an "Email" link is clicked on, or simply walk the upset user through the process over the phone. Often users would not even know what a browser is. In any situation, it's an ultimate case of severe user unfriendliness. In addition, after multiple complaints, the departmental content providers began posting the full email address, so people actually could use it. We ended up with the inconsistent display of email addresses.

Then someone has come up with an idea to create hundreds of forms, so every employee in the City could be contacted via the form. There were quite a few cons to it: the attachments - types of the files and sizes, plus senders would not have a chance to add the email address to their contact list, something else, I forgot already.

In addition, as we've discovered, having multiple names on the page and a word "Email" next to them is against 2.4.4 accessibility compliance - the same link texts can not be used for multiple different destinations. I suppose the solution to that would be saying "Email to Rick Smith" instead of just saying "Email." But the "broken" email would not go away in this case either.

As to displaying email addresses just as they are (myemail@annapolis.gov) which is the majority's preference and perfect user-friendliness, there are two concerns: possible spam (albeit we have really good spam filters) and possible accessibility issues - it appears the screen reader reads email address letter-by-letter, which, I suppose doesn't make any sense to blind people.

I'm sure there is a perfect solution for it and I must find it: we are in a process of the site redesign and will have to make changes to the hundreds of email addresses - as they are displayed on the site.

If anybody found this solution and is happy with it, please do share. THANK YOU!

Neat trick!

Another approach to stopping bots from using forms uses some simple code, without getting into Captchas: tell people right in the form "Enter the word human: " followed by a text entry box.

Have the script handler code look for the word "human" in that field and stop processing if it's not there.

We did that at EPA maybe 15 years ago, and it stopped bots cold. Bots don't understand the text on a page, so they can't interpret instructions.

Many years ago, we handled email addresses on the site with some CSS tricks. Since harvesters were scanning source code, we wrote the email addresses and email link to the code, backwards. Then we would use CSS to reverse the direction of the email on the front-end. This way the front-end link and display would read properly, but the harvester wouldn't find a legit email address in the code.

We stopped doing that several years ago as email spam filtering improved and we changed email systems. Not sure how effective that trick would be nowadays, but it did cut down spam when it was implemented.

I believe you have hit on an important issue that you have explained very well, and one that I faced a few years ago. Before I explain what I did, I would like to make a few comments.

First, in my humble opinion, the purpose for having email links on a web page is to communicate with someone so the end result should concentrate on that. So, the issue about not being able to add the email address to their contact list is not the purpose I would be concerned about. But, if there is a valid concern about that, then there are ways to fix that.

Second, email harvester bots can cause a lot of problems! Some examples include providing an authentic looking spoof email because it came from a real agency email address, causing a denial of service event by over powering the email and/or spam filter system, or a foreign government bad actor sending emails that even if you preview the message can download some undetectable harmful code. These and more happen I've seen it. So in my viewpoint it is necessary to NOT publish emails if you can get away with it.

Third, user experience is very important so the solution should keep that in mind.

Now, here's what I did. I created a database of personnel to include their email address. The website is capable of sending emails via SMTP. I put a single form on the website so when a user clicks on a button it would open this form. The button has an id that is passed to the form which will be used to query the database. The email address is never exposed and the form is simple. It also has the capability to attach one file which is uploaded in a separate process - types of files, size, etc is all configurable and validated upon upload. Most email systems have a 10 to 20 MB file attachment limit so I mirrored that limit. I also added a captcha field to increase security and prevent auto-submitting bots from attempting to hack the system.

It's not a perfect solution, but since I launched this system spam emails went down 90% and we haven't have any denial of service attacks. Plus, it provided a way for our end users to send an email to staff in an easy, convenient, and secure way. Purpose fulfilled.

Subject: [CONTENT-MANAGERS-L] Displaying Email Addresses on the Web in an Accessible Way

Hello,

Over the years we used to display hundreds of our email addresses on the website as "email" - sort of like this:

(b) (6)

Director

(b) (6)

Word "Email" is a link. Masking was done to supposedly keep the spammers away. Not sure how it could help, given that those email addresses are still available in the source code. But, the bigger issue is that this approach has alienated and/or annoyed multiple users whose browsers were not configured to open the desirable email/webmail client by default. In this case, users would hit the "Email" link relentlessly, then complain (usually call) that our email is "broken."

To fix this, one could either put a link (that nobody usually looks at) to the lengthy instructions on how to configure those browsers so they open the desirable email client when an "Email" link is clicked on, or simply walk the upset user through the process over the phone. Often users would not even know what a browser is. In any situation, it's an ultimate case of severe user unfriendliness. In addition, after multiple complaints, the departmental content providers began posting the full email address, so people actually could use it. We ended up with the inconsistent display of email addresses.

Then someone has come up with an idea to create hundreds of forms, so every employee in the City could be contacted via the form. There were quite a few cons to it: the attachments - types of the files and sizes, plus senders would not have a chance to add the email address to their contact list, something else, I forgot already.

In addition, as we've discovered, having multiple names on the page and a word "Email" next to then is against 2.4.4 accessibility compliance - the same link texts can not be used for multiple different destinations. I suppose the solution to that would be saying "Email to Rick Smith" instead of just saying "Email." But the "broken" email would not go away in this case either.

As to displaying email addresses just as they are (myemail@annapolis.gov) which is the majority's preference and perfect user-friendliness, there are two concerns: possible spam (albeit we have really good spam filters) and possible accessibility issues - it appears the screen reader reads email address letter-by-letter, which, I suppose doesn't make any sense to blind people.

I'm sure there is a perfect solution for it and I must find it: we are in a process of the site redesign and will have to make changes to the hundreds of email addresses - as they are displayed on the site.

If anybody found this solution and is happy with it, please do share. THANK YOU!

Jeffrey, you are correct, it wasn't remarkably efficient communication on my part.

In any case, email became a very popular way of citizens/government communication during the pandemic; I have never received that much email before. I was looking for some guidance - if there is a recommended protocol - on how to display contact email on government websites in a user-friendly, safe, accessible manner. I haven't discovered it yet. Different people are doing different things, there are no industry standards.

To find a solution, I visited hundreds of government websites, especially the ones that won all sorts of digital awards. Everybody displays email as they pleased, and often it's not 508 compliant (including us), regardless that the compliance requirements went in effect 22 years ago. Shame on me, but just a few months ago I discovered that displaying email links like this (it's a 2020 local gov. winner site, thus, the example) <https://www.roanokecountyva.gov/Directory.aspx?did=78> is NOT an accessible way. We can not display multiple links with the same names pointing to different location, it's against 2.4.4 Link Purpose WCAG 2 compliance.

So, I'll keep searching and asking, the email forms will not work for us. Maybe <https://digital.gov/> will recommend something, I really like their site and often look for a guidance there.

Many years ago, we handled email addresses on the site with some CSS tricks. Since harvesters were scanning source code, we wrote the email addresses and email link to the code, backwards. Then we would use CSS to reverse the direction of the email on the front-end. This way the front-end link and display would read properly, but the harvester wouldn't find a legit email address in the code.

We stopped doing that several years ago as email spam filtering improved and we changed email systems. Not sure how effective that trick would be nowadays, but it did cut down spam when it was implemented.

This email has been received from outside of DOI - Use caution before clicking on links, opening attachments, or responding.

I believe you have hit on an important issue that you have explained very well, and one that I faced a few years ago. Before I explain what I did, I would like to make a few comments.

First, in my humble opinion, the purpose for having email links on a web page is to communicate with someone so the end result should concentrate on that. So, the issue about not being able to add the email address to their contact list is not the purpose I would be concerned about. But, if there is a valid concern about that, then there are ways to fix that.

Second, email harvester bots can cause a lot of problems! Some examples include providing an authentic looking spoof email because it came from a real agency email address, causing a denial of service event by over powering the email and/or spam filter system, or a foreign government bad actor sending emails that even if you preview the message can download some undetectable harmful code. These and more happen I've seen it. So in my viewpoint it is necessary to NOT publish emails if you can get away with it.

Third, user experience is very important so the solution should keep that in mind.

Now, here's what I did. I created a database of personnel to include their email address. The website is capable of sending emails via SMTP. I put a single form on the website so when a user clicks on a button it would open this form. The button has an id that is passed to the form which will be used to query the database. The email address is never exposed and the form is simple. It also has the capability to attach one file which is uploaded in a separate process - types of files, size, etc is all configurable and validated upon upload. Most email systems have a 10 to 20 MB file attachment limit so I mirrored that limit. I also added a captcha field to increase security and prevent auto-submitting bots from attempting to hack the system.

It's not a perfect solution, but since I launched this system spam emails went down 90% and we haven't have any denial of service attacks. Plus, it provided a way for our end users to send an email to staff in an easy, convenient, and secure way. Purpose fulfilled.

Subject: [CONTENT-MANAGERS-L] Displaying Email Addresses on the Web in an Accessible Way

Hello,

Over the years we used to display hundreds of our email addresses on the website as "email" - sort of like this:

(b) (6)

Director

(b) (6)

Word "Email" is a link. Masking was done to supposedly keep the spammers away. Not sure how it could help, given that those email addresses are still available in the source code. But, the bigger issue is that this approach has alienated and/or annoyed multiple users whose browsers were not configured to open the desirable email/webmail client by default. In this case, users would hit the "Email" link relentlessly, then complain (usually call) that our email is "broken."

To fix this, one could either put a link (that nobody usually looks at) to the lengthy instructions on how to configure those browsers so they open the desirable email client when an "Email" link is clicked on, or simply walk the upset user through the process over the phone. Often users would not even know what a browser is. In any situation, it's an ultimate case of severe user unfriendliness. In addition, after multiple complaints, the departmental content providers began posting the full email address, so people actually could use it. We ended up with the inconsistent display of email addresses.

Then someone has come up with an idea to create hundreds of forms, so every employee in the City could be contacted via the form. There were quite a few cons to it: the attachments - types of the files and sizes, plus senders would not have a chance to add the email address to their contact list, something else, I forgot already.

In addition, as we've discovered, having multiple names on the page and a word "Email" next to then is against 2.4.4 accessibility compliance - the same link texts can not be used for multiple different destinations. I suppose the solution to that would be saying "Email to Rick Smith" instead of just saying "Email." But the "broken" email would not go away in this case either.

As to displaying email addresses just as they are (myemail@annapolis.gov) which is the majority's preference and perfect user-friendliness, there are two concerns: possible spam (albeit we have really good spam filters) and possible accessibility issues - it appears the screen reader reads email address letter-by-letter, which, I suppose doesn't make any sense to blind people.

I'm sure there is a perfect solution for it and I must find it: we are in a process of the site redesign and will have to make changes to the hundreds of email addresses - as they are displayed on the site.

If anybody found this solution and is happy with it, please do share. THANK YOU!

Web managers community,

The Federal Web Council, an interagency group of digital and web directors, collaborates across agencies to improve federal digital services. We've heard from several of you that you'd like to hear more about what the Federal Web Council is working on, so we're going to send out occasional Council updates—and this is the second.

The Council last met on Thursday, October 15, 2020. One main topic of discussion was how to improve presentation of required links and content on agency websites, as detailed on the required links page on Digital.gov.

Required Links

To make it easier for agencies to include all required content, and bring some consistency to how these links are displayed across the federal web space, GSA created an identifier component in the U.S. Web Design System (USWDS). The identifier is a supplement to your standard site footer. GSA encourages you to implement the identifier on your website.

GSA also recently updated the U.S. government banner component in USWDS to improve clarity and trust. The banner helps visitors understand that they are viewing an official federal website. If you currently have the banner on your public-facing website, implement the latest version of USWDS to update the code and language.

Some agencies are required to include additional language explaining that the website is publicly-funded. Check with your Web Council rep or General Counsel to see if your agency has this requirement in its appropriation.

21st Century IDEA Reporting

On another note, by mid-December, all federal executive branch agencies must submit their second annual report on progress implementing 21st Century IDEA. See, for example, GSA's 2019 report on its progress in implementing 21st Century IDEA at gsa.gov/digitalstrategy.

GSA drafted and shared a template for our 2020 report, and I'm sharing it here again. Though it's not required to use the template, you're welcome to use it to develop your report as well. Coordinate your reporting efforts with your agency CIO and Web Council rep.

Your Priorities for FY 2021

What is your top web priority for FY 2021, and how can GSA support you? Would training or implementation guidance on a specific topic be helpful? What about product demos, or bite-sized training on very specific topics? What are some things our community can tackle together in the coming year, to improve digital service delivery? Send me an email and let me know your thoughts and priorities!

Save the Date

The next community huddle is tentatively scheduled for November 16 at 2 p.m. ET. We'll talk about 21st Century IDEA reporting. Pencil it in and be on the lookout for a calendar invite in the next couple of weeks.

Web managers,

Last Friday, many of us met with members of the Multilingual Community for a huddle on designing for translation. Thank you for the lively, engaging conversation! And an extra big THANK YOU to Laura Godfrey for co-hosting the huddle with me.

We discussed a lot of things related to designing for translation, including:

- Understand your audience. Determine who needs to know the information, and identify the non-English groups who would benefit from your work.
- Consider text length. For example, romance languages may take 15 to 20% more room.
- Consider text direction. Some languages are read right-to-left or vertically. W3C provides tips on inline markup and bidirectional text in HTML.
- Use one style for dates and numbers. Different cultures use different notations for dates and numbers. Check out the USAGov Bilingual Style Guide for its guidance on dates, times, and other numerical information.
- Use a dedicated URL for each language page. Help your audience find the information they seek in the language they prefer. Use the international convention for URLs and follow other best practices for managing multi-regional and multilingual sites.
- Use plain language. Use active verbs. Write short sentences. Avoid jargon. Stay away from acronyms. Proofread.
- Consider layout and imagery. Design for longer languages first. Think about how the design works for right-to-left languages. Use international symbols as an excellent way to convey a message regardless of language or cultural values.

Join the Multilingual Community if you're interested in continuing the conversation from the huddle.
